Gambia Radio also broadcast an appeal from the rebels for unspecified support from the Soviet Union, Guinea-Bissau and Guinea. And it carried a statement by a senior Senegalese Moslem clergyman, el Hadji Habib Sy, who was in Banjul, urging that Senegal pull hack its troops.

"Don't order the Senegalese sol-diers to shoot," he said. The situ-ation here is serious and the soldiers can't do anything."

Earlier, Sir Dawda told reporters in neighboring Scnegal that it. was only a matter of hours before the Senegalese paratroops crushed the revolt, which began Thursday while Sir Dawda was in London. He asked for Senegalese assist-

Polish Parliament Enacts Law Relaxing Censorship

By James M. Markham

WARSAW — The Polish Parliament voted into law Friday a bill that tends to institutionalize press and cultural freedoms registered during the last year.

Rather than proclaim sweeping freedom in the press, radio, television, theater and cinema, the bill attempts to state in considerable detail what may and may not he published or hroadcast. It retains prior censorship hut restricts the censor's powers and creates a system of appeal.

Defending the bill, Karol Mal-cuzynski, a deputy and a respected commentator, called it "an important step forward" and a fulfillment of the year-old Gdansk agreements that gave birth to Solidarity. A central demand of the strikers on the Baltic coast last year was the easing of censorship.

Mr. Malcuzynski, who had battled in the past with heavy-handed censors, caught the spirit of open-ness in the country when he de-nounced and ridiculed the previ-ous situation as "a shameful cor-ner of our history." Bringing smiles to deputies' faces, he recounted now-forgotten taboos of the censors, including a ban on mentioning the Watergate scandal for fear of damaging a planned summit between President Richard M. Nixon and Soviet President Leonid I. Brezhnev.

The new law prohibits criticism of Poland's alliance with the Soviet Union — a stricture that has been observed here, on the whole, in an otherwise extremely uninhibited

Solidarity had criticized an early draft of the bill for obliging it to submit its local bulletins to the censor. A compromise worked out by parliament exempts such publications hut sets up a warning sys-tem that could lead to prior censorship if loosely understood codes are violated.

Moscow Assails U.S. Congress on Polish Resolution

MOSCOW -- The U.S. Congress came under stinging criticism here Friday over a House resolution that Moscow called "pro-

Signal's Meaning

[The Polish news agency PAP also issued a statement condemning the congressional resolution, though the Polish commentary appeared to be less sharp than the Russian, Reuters reported from Warsaw.

[PAP noted that the resolution contained nothing new but that its timing so soon after the Warsaw party congress was strange. "It is hard to resist the impression that the authors of the text warning Poland against internal repressions' have not noticed the congress at all, have not heard at all that the renewal process and social dialogue are under way in Poland," Reuters quoted PAP as saying.]

With evident anger, the Tass commentary asserted that the "current difficulties in Poland are, to a considerable extent, the result of subversive economie and political actions" by the West in general and U.S. intelligence agencies in particular.

Tass than took to task the House resolution. By passing it, the agency said, "Washington usurps the right to dictate to a sovereign state what measures it may or may not take for restoring order in the country and safeguarding the overwhelming majority of the population from counterrevolutionary attacks encouraged by the West." Tass added that "the meaning of this sig-nal to the Polish counterrevolutionaries is 'the West will help you.' "

Since the Polish congress the Russians have kept surprisingly quiet about the new unrest in Poland. The Communist Party newspaper Pravda Friday carried a partial text of the Polish party resolution, leaving out its analysis of the causes of the crisis and other aspects such as call for openness and honesty in the party and praise for patriot-ism of the Polish church.

Family of Maze Hunger Striker Authorizes Medical Treatment

By Leonard Downie Jr.

Irish nationalist bunger strikers in British-ruled Northern Ireland was given medical treatment to save his life on instructions from his family Friday, while another was in a coma and near death.

Patrick Quinn, 29, who is serving a 14-year sentence in the Maze prison for attempting to kill Brit-ish soldiers in Ulster, was rushed to a hospital outside the prison af-ter his family signed a statement authorizing the authorities "to take whatever steps were necessary to save his life," according to a gov-ernment spokesman. Mr. Quinn had been given last rites after 47 days of starvation when his condition deteriorated much more rapidly than had been expected.

[A spokesman for Sinn Fein, the political wing of the Provisional Irish Republican Army, said Friday that he had no immediate comment because hunger strike supporters outside the Maze had not not been in content with Men. not yet been in contact with Mr. Quinn's family, Renters reported. ["What the families decide to do is up to themselves," he said, add-ing that he had received oo indica-tion from the families of other hunger strikers that they might also ask for medical treatment, a move he called "not impossible."]

Broken Renks

The action taken by Mr. Quinn's mother and sister to remove him from the hunger strike is the first break in the ranks of the protesting prisoners' relatives. The families of several of the hunger strikers have been complaining to the Provision-al IRA leadership that the hunger strike is becoming futile because the British government appears to have moved as far as it is likely to go, and support for the protest, particularly in the Irish Republic, appears to be diminishing.

lrish Premier Garret FitzGerald added to this pressure Friday when he publicly accused the Provisional IRA of thwarting repeated efforts during the last two weeks to achieve a settlement of the protest.

Meanwhile, Kevin Lynch, 25, another hunger striker and a mem-ber of the Irish National Liberation Army, a splinter group of IRA terrorists, went into a coma Friday after refusing to eat for 70 days. He is serving 10 years after being convicted of participation in armed attacks oo security forces in Ulster and a terrorist punishmen killing.

Kieran Doherty, 25, a Provision-al IRA member elected to the Irish Parliament last month, was reported to be conscious but in very weak condition after 71 days with-out food. He is serving a 22-year sentence for possession of explo-sives and firearms after a terrorist protesting Irish nationalist prisoners dismissed an International Red Cross delegation last week as pawns of the British." "intransigence" of the Provisional IRA just as the British appeared to he giving ground under pressure from Dublin. "It seems to me to be no accident that as the efforts of the Irish government to help solve the crisis hecame more public," Mr. FitzGerald said, "the efforts of the Provisional IRA to obstruct a solution redoubled. "In thwarting these [and other] efforts, the leadership of the Provisional fRA, far from saving lives, was once again facing all those concerned with a stark choice between total concession to their de-mands and the deaths of further bunger strikers." The Irish premier said that "it is clear that those who are in charge of this structure [of command in the Mazel can at any time end the crisis by ordering the hunger strikers to end their protest. They

China Limits Social Research by Foreigners

By Michael Weisskopf

Washington Post Service
PEKING — Two years after an agreement opening the nation to American scholars, the Chinese government has imposed new restrictions on foreign social science research on such touchy subjects as China's birth control program and factory organization.

U.S. Embassy officials here were told that American anthropologists and social economists planning to do several months of field research starting this fall in Chi-nese villages and work places will have to restrict their site visits to

The Chinese Academy of Social Sciences, which coordinates the re-search programs, explained recent-ly that visiting scholars consume too much of local officials' time, keeping them from the task of revi-

Foreign scholars and diplomats, however, believe that there are more compelling reasons for the research crackdown. They say Chinese officials object to the freewheeling and sometimes unruly personal style of Western specialized and sometimes the same of the sam cialists and to their aggressive pok-ing around in Chinese society.

The new rules will considerably narrow one of the major avenues of Western observation into Chip nese life. For the academics, the chance to live in Chinese villages or investigate factory, life in opened up a rich vein of analytical material. It is of pioneering sten cance to American social scientists, who were deprived of access to the mainland during 30 years of Chinese-American hostility.

As part of the warming climate of relations, Washington and Pe-king agreed in 1979 to exchange scholars. The new limits on field work apply to all foreign social scientists working in China, but its impact is chiefly felt by the American researchers, who have domi-

Israel Hopes Truce Will Aid U.S. Ties

JERUSALEM - In the aftermath of Israel's air attack on Beirut and the strain it brought to Israel-U.S. relations, government officials in Jerusalem are boping that their adherence to the Lebanon cease-fire arrangement will be seen in Washington as a gesture of goodwill to U.S. interests.

The Israelis have emphasized the military sacrifice they made by agreeing to the truce, which went into effect July 24 and ended two weeks of intensive Israeli bombardment of Palestinian forces in southern Lehanon and Palestinian shelling of towns and kibbutzim in northern Israel.

"For us," said David Kimche. director general of the Israeli Foreign Ministry, "the obvious thing would have been to have carried on and really, once and for all, to have finished off this problem. And we didn't. We stopped, we agreed, because we took the United States' interests into consideration. This is understood, and I do believe that this will lead to an improvement in relations."

Although the halt in fighting also brought a respite to northern Israeli settlements, the Palestine Liberation Organizacion appeared more eager than Israel for a truce, evidently because PLO posicions were being hit with more ferocity. The deciding factor in Israel's agreement was U.S. pressure not only from the administration. but more significantly, from the American Jewish community and supporters of Israel in Congress. Mr. Habib apparently asked the Saudi Arabians, who were eager to win congressional approval for their purchase of U.S. advancewarning reconnaissance aircraft, to appeal to the PLO. The Saudi Arabians are believed to have done so, arguing that a truce would enhance the PLO's prestige. The PLO reportedly made a tentative agreement to accept. Mr. Habib reportedly told Mr. Begin that the attacks were creating sympathy for the PLO and enhancing its status. Clouded Namibia Future Divides Autonomous Baster Group

By Joseph Lelyveld New York Times Service

REHOBOTH, South-West Africa - They speak Afrikaans and when they trekked into the and vastness of South-West Africa in the 19th century to found their own republic, they were like numerous groups of seminomadic Afrikaners trying to win heir own space in Africa.

Only one thing kept them apart but it was the most important thing and it meant they could never be recognized as Afrikaners. It was race.

So they took the disparaging Afrikaans term with which the whites had always dismissed them and wore it proudly as an ethnic name. Now in this country, which is also known as Namibia, it is notmal to speak of the people of mixed race called the Basters without any of the connotations of miscegenation and illegitimacy that still adhere to the word in colloquial Afrikaans speech.

Here in the very center of the land, where they have been for more than a century, the term Basters with a capital B implies sturdiness and independ-

These days, as doubt over Namibia's future deepens, the term also implies a measure of political uncertainty and confusion. The country's population of one million is divided into a dozen ethnic and racial groups, most of which are subdivided into numerous political factions struggling to be recognized as parties. At one point last year, 39 distinct parties were counted in South-West Africa. If anything, the number has increased since then,

Rehoboth, the home of the Basters, who number no more than 35,000, has at least four parties. The Basters have their own territory, their own government, their own laws, some of which, the so-called Laws of the Basters, date from the original settle-

But the longer the struggle over Namibian inde-pendence drags on in international forums and in a remote guerrilla war near the Angolan border, the more divided the Basters seem to become. In this respect, they appear to be no different from the territory's other tribes.

Only one of the country's political parties, the South-West Africa People's Organization, makes a serious claim to speak for the Namibian people as a whole. But its detractors say it speaks for only the largest of the ethnic groups, the Ovambos, who ac-count for not quite half the entire population.

Shadowy Legality

The fear of Ovambo hegemony is the strongest political weapon South Africa has in seeking to organize resistance to the SWAPO, which has a shadowy legal existence in the territory as well as a military presence in the form of a guerrilla movement. But in Rehoboth and elsewhere that fear is also a motive for seeking a place in the national and even the international scheme of things, even if that means making an accommodation with the insur-gents. As modern politics seep into the dusty farming community — a small sprawl of one-story stuc-co buildings with tin roofs, surmounted by five church steeples, in a large, empty landscape — the old ideal of Baster separateness is giving way to a

Traditionally the Basters practiced their own form of apartheid. It was exclusive but not racially exclusive, for it was always possible for a black or a white to marry into the community. There was even a formal process of naturalization in which the elders passed on an applicant's character before grant-ing citizenship. Only citizens of Rehoboth could own land in the Baster area.

After South-West Africa fell under German and then South African colonial authority, Baster self-rule was systematically reduced to little more than a sentimental memory. Even then, whites could buy land only on the periphery of the Baster area, not in it. In the years that Rehoboth has been under South African control, the ancestral lands of the Basters have shrunk in this way from more than 15,000 square miles to the present 5,300.

In the same time, the number of blacks inside the area has steadily increased, so that today the Basters actually living on their ancestral lands account for less than half the total population of roughly 62,000, according to figures supplied by a local official.

Under the political system the South Africans have promulgated, political power at the local level is distributed on ethnic and racial lines. The rough-ly 25,000 Basters in Rehoboth find themselves governing roughly 25,000 Namas, 10,000 Damaras and 2,000 Ovambos, while the 10,000 Basters who live outside the area are governed by others.

Despite their tradition of exclusiveness, it is hard to find any Basters who speak well of the existing arrangement. Dr. Ben Africa, the one Baster who has carved out a role for himself in the territory's has carved out a role for himself in the termory's national politics, says that the governing Democratic Turnhalle Alliance, of which he is a deputy chairman, would lose an election against SWAPO if it made an ethnic rather than a national appeal.

In fact, the Turnhalle Alliance already appears to have lost out in Rehoboth. At the moment, political authority locally is in the hands of a faction of con-servative landholders who sought to demonstrate how up-to-date they were by calling their party the Liberation Front. Sadat Plans to Stress Palestinians in Talks

By David B. Ottaway

Washington Pass Service CAIRO - President Anwar Sadat, considering the Israeli with-drawal from Sinai virtually assured and no longer at issue, intends to focus on the Palestinian aspect of the Camp David accords in his talks with President Reagan next week, according to Foreign Minis-ter Kamal Hassan Ali.

Declaring that recent events in Lebanon proved "peace is urgently needed for the area," Mr. Ali said in an interview that the main thrust of Mr. Sadat's Washington visit would be to convince the Resear administration of the need to provide the Palesamans with autonomy on the occupied West Bank and Gaza Strip.

"Here will be the main message to President Reagan," be said. Mr. Ali also urged the Rengan administration "to recognize and deal directly" with the Palestine Liberation Organization, saying this would give new impetus to the peace process and encourage the PLO to recognize Israei. Mr. Sadat is expected to discuss what he describes as the Sovier threat to Egypt and Sudan via Libya and to urge a more active U.S. role in the region. During the two days of discussions, he and his aides are likely to press for the delivery of more arms at a faster pace to allow Egypt to play a greater role in protecting Arab allies of the United States.

U.S. Request to Join In Developing Arms Divides Japanese

By William Chapman Washington Post Service

TOKYO - The Japanese government appears sharply divided over a new U.S. request to put this country's technological prowess to work for joint development of

Some officials have responded favorably but others, and most of the major news media, have objected, warning that helping the United States develop sophisticated weapons would violate Japan's pacifist constitution and a 14-yearold policy prohibiting arms sales

The request for arms technology sharing was put forth forcefully by American military officials early this summer and has become the focal point of U.S. efforts to get more military support from Japan.

It has become clear in recent months that Japan is not willing to increase its military budget sub-stantially despite U.S. military officials' insistence that it should contribute more muscle to counter a Soviet buildup in the Far East.

Futuristic Weapoury

Those Japanese officials who favor the new technology sharing re-quest are arguing within the gov-ernment that it could take some of the U.S. pressure off and that it would be wise to respond affirma-

No details of the American request have been disclosed, but it is understood that the U.S. military officials want Japan to assist in the development of futuristic weaponry involving the use of such ad-vanced technology as computers, electronics, lasers and fiber optics. In some of those fields, it is believed that Japan is slightly ahead of U.S. technology.

At meetings in Hawaii and Washington, the general principle was outlined to the director of Japan's Defense Agency, Gen. Joji Omura, in language reminding him that the United States in the past has shared military technology with Japan. The United States has provided information that has helped Japan to produce several weapons systems, including the F-15 fighter plane, naval air-patrol planes, and Hawk missiles, although the most advanced technological secrets were not shared.

The Americans said that so far technology exchange has been only one-way traffic and they now want to make it two-way," a Japanese official said.

Favorable Greeting

The concept bas been greeted favorably within the military agency, the Foreign Ministry, and the pre-mier's office, although no formal response has been made.

But one of the most influential ministries, International Trade and Industry, has expressed strong reservations. Its views may count the most because any applications from Japanese companies to transfer technology to another country must pass through that ministry.

Joint arms development is being resisted by opposition parties and much of the news media as a new dangerous tactic bound to lead to a "militarization" of the

The 1967 policy banning most exports "is an open declaration to the world that this country shall never be a 'merchant of death,' " declared an editorial in the Mainichi newspapers. "We have pledged that we shall not militarize our economy through the production and export of weapons."

Inside the government, proponents of the U.S. idea are arguing that it is time to "break the ice," as one of them put it, and open the door for a military technology exchange. They contend that the 1967 policy should not apply to the United States and, in any case, is superseded by a 1954 U.S.-Japan defense assistance treaty.

The government of Premier Zen-ko Suzuki has enough political strength to press for an exception favoring the U.S. proposal, but a showdown would set off an angry debate, with opponents arguing that Japan is bowing to American

The actual performance of a technology-sharing agreement would also be tricky for Japan. Most of the desirable new military technology is privately owned by large Japanese corporations. There is no way to compel companies to share their secrets, although the government might encourage them to do so, an official said.

The details of an agreement are to be explored during a September meeting of U.S. and Japanese military officials.

Lobbying, Testimony Dispel Senators' Misgivings About Casey

By Robert L. Jackson and David Lamb

Los Angeles Times Service WASHINGTON - Personal lobbying and persuasive testimony behind closed doors by CIA Director William J. Casey are credited with defusing a major congressional inquiry into his business trans-actions almost before it began.

Members of the Senate Intelligence Committee, who Wednesday unanimously endorsed Mr. Casey to remain in office, said Thursday that the 68-yearold former Reagan campaign chief impressed them on two scores in his testimony Wednesday.

They said he combined a strong defense of his past business dealings with a disarming confession that he had erred in choosing Max C. Hugel, a controversial businessman, for the sensitive CIA position of chief of clandestine services.

Mr. Hugel resigned last month amid charges that he had been involved in improper stock deals in 1974. His departure stirred a controversy over Mr. Casey himself, especially after two court rulings critical of Mr. Casey's past business dealings became

"Mr. Casey has acquitted himself very well," said Sen. Jake Garn. The Utah Republican added that his only concern was "what appears to have been a lack of good judgment" in the hiring of Mr. Hugel.

A Democratic committee member, Sen. Henry M. Jackson of Washington, said Mr. Casey "made it clear to us he made a mistake" in choosing Mr. Hugel, a personal friend. Sen. Jackson defended Mr. Casey's past business deals in language similar to that used by Mr. Casey.

Lot of Litigation

At a breakfast meeting with reporters. Sen. Jackson said Mr. Casey "was involved in a lot of litigation over the years because he was serving a lot of [business] organizations."

Two Republican senators, who refused to allow use of their names, criticized Sen. Barry Goldwater, the Arizona Republican who chairs the committee, for calling for Mr. Casey's resignation a week earlier without having evidence of misconduct.

Those senators and other committee sources said

Sen. Goldwater had never been happy with Mr. Casey's appointment and would have preferred that a career intelligence officer head the CIA.

The committee agreed Wednesday that "no While the committee agreed Wednesday that "no Casey."

They also said that Sen. Goldwater was angry with Mr. Casey for failing to tell the committee about the turmoil over Mr. Hugel, although Mr. Casey knew about it almost a week before Mr. Hugel

Meanwhile. Sen. Harrison H. Schmitt, a New Mexico Republican, said: "I think Casey has learned that he has to keep our committee informed. I feel a lot more comfortable having heard from Casey. Our preliminary staff study and his testimony showed absolutely nothing that would disqualify him from bolding office."

In the days before his testimony, Mr. Casey made a point of calling on committee members individually in their offices, and this lobbying was effective. Sen. Lloyd M. Bentsen, a Texas Democrat, said of critics of alleged business misconduct, as Mr. Casey left his office: "They haven't laid a glove on him."

Edwin Meese 3d, the adviser to President Reagan, was asked if the White House had lobbied actively

While the committee agreed Wednesday that "no basis has been found for concluding that Mr. Casey is unfit to serve" as CIA director, it instructed its staff to tie up "loose ends" during the next two to three weeks. That will include looking at federal court records not yet examined in full.

Initially Skeptical

Meanwhile, interviews with past and present CIA agents — most of whom refused the use of their names - have shown that many were initially skeptical about Mr. Casey, a businessman-lawyer, when he took control of the agency in January.

But in the last six months, the agents said, he has earned the respect of many former critics, proving himself a tough conservative who would fight for the agency's budget and its intelligence-gathering capabilities. "He's highly respected in the intelligence community," said Lou Conein, who retired in 1968 after 21 years with the CIA. "People in the agency think he's a good guy. He's strong for them."

Indian officials insist they will be able to operate Tarapur even without further shipments of fuel from the United States. Thus, it appears that India terminedly and proudly has decided again to go it alone, with the possibility of temporary Soviet help, despite the costs which Westcrn experts believe have been great in the nuclear field. One scientist said that much of the Indian scien-

As a result, the program continually runs behind government projections despite a desperate shortage of power in the country. Its goal of generating 2,700 megawatts of nuclear electricity by 1980 was never reached and the target date was extended to 1984. Observers believe it is doubtful India will even reach that goal.

The country now generates 3 percent of its electric power with nuclear plants and by the year 2000 wants to increase nuclear energy production to meet 10 percent of its needs. But that projection also is considered doubtful.

Nonetheless, there are no signs that India plans to turn away from its goal of becoming a nuclear power on its own.

"I'm a great believer in self reliance. Buying technology can be stifling," said Dr. Raja Ramana, director of India's sophisticated Bhabha Atomic Research Center, near Bombay. The chairman of India's atomic energy commission claimed that "when you buy technology you have to buy under all sorts of conditions. We just don't

A Conflict of Priorities

The Experiment Begins

The Agees, the Wolfs

West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt's decision to cut real military spending next year illustrates a classic conflict of priorities within the Western alliance. For both political and national economic reasons, which were driven firmly home by Mr. Schmidt's Free Democratic coalition partners, military spending had to be included in an over-all effort to trim more than $8 billion from Bonn's budget. That logic, however. may be lost on President Reagan, who has just cut his own budget by $37 billion while adding $25 billion for the armed forces. And as a fillip, he is decreasing taxes by 25 percent over three years.

To complicate matters, Mr. Schmidt is blaming Mr. Reagan for his problem. If U.S. interest rates were not so high, be argues. there would be more buoyancy in the West German economy and it would not be necessary to cut spending. Now, the reasoning begins to get circular. The U.S. rationale for high interest rates is that they will belp reduce inflation. But the sharp increase in military spending will feed inflation.

The difference between Mr. Schmidt and Mr. Reagan, therefore, is one of priorities. For the U.S. president, whose political posi-tion is currently rock-solid, building up Western military strength to confront the Soviet challenge comes first. For the West German chancellor, whose present footing is slightly less firm, domestic concerns top the

the president has accomplished a sharp break with recent tradition. The first question is the response of investment and business to this sudden relaxation of taxes. How much of their tax savings will people put into productive investment, as Mr. Reagan expects, and how much into vacations in Acapulco or condominiums in Florida? Nobody knows. The next question, and for Mr. Reagan the crucial one, is the response of the political sys-tem. How will middle-income Americans re-act — with gratitude for the cuts in their own taxes, or with resentment against the disproportionately larger ones for wealthier people? How sensitive are U.S. voters to questions of income distribution? Since the distribution of income has not changed for more than 30 years, no one can really say. But an answer

tary growth target, Mr. Schmidt knows he will be criticized by the United States, mostly for setting a bad example for other European allies and Japan and Canada, both of which were condemned for not carrying their share in a recent U.S. report on burden sharing. It is likely though, that if Mr. Reagan were confronted with a similar choice between a relatively small cut in defense spending and political survival, he would act similarly. The 3 percent annual increase is an admirable goal. but wherever it bumps up against a political threat of the magnitude of the one Mr. Schmidt was facing, it must give way.

The underlying theme, both on security and economic questions, is interdependence. Politics, that beloved necessity of democracy, sometimes turns up as the monkeywrench in the works. But a born politician like Mr. Reagan, should bave no difficulty understanding Mr. Schmidt's problem, even though he might not be delighted with the chancellor's method of solving it. And the chancellor, who knows something about politics and economics, should understand that he will not succeed in hectoring Mr. Reagan into changing his economic strategy until he's had a chance to see whether it works or

Mr. Reagan is right, more or less, about the relative importance of the Soviet threat, Mr. Schmidt is right about Bonn's need to cut spending to reduce borrowing. These two practical men should avoid recriminations and get together to indulge in a little politics, the art of the possible.

Reagan Has the Cards, But a Winning Hand?

By Hobart Rowen

WASHINGTON — President Reagan now has his very own tax bill, to go with an already established victory for his dramatically reduced budget, substantial regulatory reform, and a tough policy of monetary restraints, put-ting into effect all four main elements of the Reagan economic recovery program.

With this a fait accompli, what lies ahead is a fair test of whether Reaganomies is going to work, or whether the doubts of many here and abroad will be borne out. Some believe that the underlying economic problems in the United States will not be solved by this or any other tax bill, but must be met by more basic labor and management reforms.

"The economic situation envisaged here for 1982 is weaker in real and nominal GNP growth than the forecast published by the [Reagan] administration," said the International Monetary Fund's mid-year world outlook report.

Signals of Slowdown

What the president bas promised us is that his dose of sup-ply-side tax-cutting, coupled with monetary stringency and a reined-in government will do what has in government will do what has never been done before: create a rapid economic expansion (5 per cent in 1983 over 1982) together with quickly declining inflation (to 5.7 per cent in 1983).

The administration got its victory on the tax bill just as the economy is giving off clear signals of a slowdown, characterized by Economic Council Chairman Murray Weidenbaum as "spongy." That Weidenbaum as "spongy." That means, he says, the economy has weakened from a strong first quarter, but has "the inherent ability to resume expanding rather smartly, especially with the economic poli-cies that the administration is pur-

At the same time, Reaganomics a tree same time, Reaganoints is getting a break from a modera-tion in inflationary pressures, with the consumer price index below double digits measured over a full year's time. The major elements in the leaves inflation rate and clearly the lower inflation rate are clearly the oil glut, and a better result recently in food prices—neither fac-tor attributable to Reaganomics. On the other hand, Mr. Weiden-baum claims that a share of the credit for moderating inflation should go to the monetary restraint program.

But if the latter is true, it must mean that high interest rates have slowed economic activity, which in turn has softened demand for housing, durable goods, autom-biles and the like. This hardly seems to dovetail with the promise of lower inflation and greater eco-nomic activity. Indeed, the reason the economy is "spongy" is due to high interest rates.

So far, the president has stood firmly behind the Fed's tough polimoney supply, without regard to what happens to interest rates. But the fear of "overkill" continues to widen, now that inflation has abat-ed somewhat. And for the first time, even Mr. Weidenbaum, in a mid-year assessment, says he has to "acknowledge that progress" in reducing interest rates (yet another seemingly contradictory Reagan objective) "has been slow." Mr. Weidenbaum told the Sen-ate Banking Committee that although short-term rates have come down some from mid-May peaks, we have not yet seen the major downward movement that would ordinarily be expected to follow clear-cut evidence of a moderation in inflationary pressures and busi-ness activity." But he optimistical ly promises that interest rates will begin to wind down "in the near begin to wind down "in the near future."

Wall Streeters, who have been fooled before, will believe it when they see it. They observe that already, Mr. Weidenbaum has had to mark up his earlier 1981 forecast for the interest rate on 90-day Treasury bills from 11 to 13.6 per cent, and for 1982, from 8.9 per cent to 10.5 per cent. But even the new forecasts imply a sharp decline from the current 15-plus percent level, to what seems like an cent level, to what seems like an unbelievably slow 6.8 per cent in 1984, at the same time that the White House target calls for a 50 per cent slash in monetary growth.

Peter G. Peterson, Secretary of commerce in the Nixon administration and now chairman of Lehman Brothers Kulm Loeb, Inc., says in a speech he's been making around the country that when the Reagan program first appeared and was put into computers, nine out of 10 times, the read-out was: "Does not compute."

Does not compute."
But beyond the computers, there is the worry about the deficit. Experts like Henry Kaufman point to the combination of the revenue loss from the giant tax bill now approved by both Houses of Congress, and the massive increase in defense spending, which together outweigh the cuts in nonmilitary

In Wall Street, the typical guess is that the fiscal 1982 deficit will run at least $20 billion higher than the administration's most recent projection of $42.5 billion, not counting off-budget borrowing. Some pessimists, Mr. Petersen says, suggest the possibility of a $100 billion deficit next year.

Even within the administration, there is concern among those not swept away by rose-colored expec-tations of the potential of supply-side economics. Office of Manage-ment and Budget Director David-Stockman, who has to come up with some $40-plus billion of further cuts for the 1984 budget (to achieve a promised balance) is leading a fight to cut back some of the increases in the swollen de-fense budget. It promises to be a bitter internal battle next year.

In any event, many observers, were saying last January, in a ning tide of good will toward Mr. Reagan, that however untested were the ideas of his economic program. "It ought to be given a chance." Whether or not that was a good idea is now mooted. The chance is there, and the results can be measured against the promise.

... With a Shadow Cast Over Gibraltar

By Victor de la Serna

MADRID - The Spaniards can sympathize with the British. From Maze prison to the dole queues, many problems on the isles sound familiar to Spanish ears. In such bleak times, the British people could obviously use the imperial shot in the arm provided by the royal wedding - or, as one Spanish reporter put it, a few "days of pomp and roses."

Where the sympathy ends, in this country, is when the royal enthusiasm blinds the Foreign Office outside sensitivities, ignoring the discreet but pressing warnings from Madrid about the awkward ness and even the offensiveness of the visit by the princely couple to Gibraitar. Indeed, the reckless abandon of the London authorities, oblivious to all but their own aco-Victorian frenzy, alienated other people and other nations as well Greek President Constantine Caramanlis declined to attend the weeding after ex-King Constan-uae had received a formal invita-tion calling him "king of the Hel-

Suddenly, the royal saub awoke British public opinion to the fact that Gibraitar was more than a diplomatic pley or a Franco-era political gimmick in the eyes of most Spaniards, their king included. Te many Britons, that was a baffling revelation. They believed - and still do, in most cases, despite the incident - that the British presence on the Rock was a fact of life, an inalienable right, a leasant and accepted reminder of a rich colonial past - one which should be no more disturbed than the many quaint traditions which Neutral observers have tended to drift toward that cozy British explanation of the fact: American rspaper reports of the incident have used the euphemism "Medi-terranean enclave" to describe Gi-braltar, forgetting that its legal was sure to further deteriorate the and, indeed, thoroughly British name is that of "crown colony," the last remaining colony on Euro-pean soil. Spanish soil, to be more precise, until the occupation in 1704. National resentment of such an occupation and of the existence of a foreign military base at the tip of Andalusia has gone over party lines and deep into popular feelings since the 18th century.

Handy Excuse

The use by the besieged Franco regime of the Gibraltar claim for own domestic needs provided Britain with a handy excuse for obscuring the depth and pervasive-ness of Spanish feelings about the Rock and to minimize UN resolutions calling on the British to de-colonize Gibraltar. Feeble at-tempts to liken King Juan Carlos' attitude to that of Franco don't seem to have prospered in Britain. No other modern monarch has had to earn his democratic spurs by singlehandedly defeating a military coup as the Spanish king did our months ago. The Spanish king's coup d'eclat has probably taken a good deal of juster from the pro-British show carefully prepared by Sir Joshua Hassan, the Gibraltar premier.

The sobering influence of King Juan Carlos' attitude may have, for the first time, instilled a modicum of perspective and international awareness into popular British perceptions of the Gibraltar proble That, in itself, may be a hopeful development.

In addition, the overall Spanish reaction has been such that no permanent harm to the negotiations with Britain is foreseeable. Politicians of all persuasions have backed the king's symbolic get-ture, but there has been no Iranan syndrome": All political parties active in La Linea de la Concepción, across the closed Gibraita border, have agreed not to stage anti-British demonstrations during the visit by Prince Charles at Lady Diana, as they might spin bitter counter-demonstrations of the Rock

And the Spanish media have taken the whole incident willigrain of salt. In a front-page cor-toon in the menarchist Maddid daily ABC, the Prince of Walt shows his wife the Bay of Gibig-tar, and tells her. These Spaniards are really foud of traditions. In centuries they've been trying to mother."

Hearst's Independence League decided to call a convention here to nominate the aewspaper proprietor for governor. This action practically insures that the Democratic State Committee meeting here tomorrow will ignore Mr. Hearst and take action looking to the nomination of some strong Democrat at a later date. The reaction of Republicans to this decision was that it meent the renomination of Mr. Higgins on the theory that Tespite his admitted weakness as a word-getter he would win a three-comered light with a split Democratic vote.

Robert Rutherford McCormick, owner of the Chicago Tribune. "Col. McCormick never cites authority, being it," Liebling summarized). The articles were collected in "The Press." (1961), which was revised and repubhished this spring.

Another anthology of mostly New Yorker pieces, "Liebling Abroad," recently came out, and two more books will be reissued this year: his book on boxing. "The Sweet Science," and his rollicking notes on Broadway drifters, screwballs and wideboys, "The Telephone in full swing.

During his lifetime, none of Liebling's books ever sold more than 3,500 copies apiece: and they went out of print so swiftly that he had to pay through the nose when he needed a copy from a secondhand bookstore. "While my books always got good reviews, stirred up I have had to pay as much as $6 for a copy of Telephone Booth Indian' when I was out of of Telephone Booth Indian when I was out of them—they simply didn't sell," he wrote in a letter quoted in Raymond Sokolov's recent Liebling biography, "Wayward Reporter." His writing has a sumptuous and breezy confidence although, as a stripling in 1922, Liebling confided to a Barnard girl that he didn't think he would write anything great until he was 25. He frested and revised constantly. During the drâle de overre Wayerley Root ly. During the drôle de guerre, Waverley Root came into Liebling's room at Paris' Hotel Louvois, opposite the Bibliothèque Nationale, and found the floor and bed covered with yellow copy paper that Liebling was rearranging into piles. "This is the 256th story I've written for the New Yorker and I'm still in a sweat each time that they won't take it," be said: The biggest compliment I ever heard Joe Liebling give anyone was that he was a careful writer," the late S.J. Perelman wrote to a friend. "I've always thought that the best acco-Liebling died from the effects of gluttony, the second most pleasurable deadly sin. He was big and bald and bespectacled — "all cir-" said a New Yorker colleague - with smallish features crowded into the middle of his face, giving him a babyish look. Jonrnalists, he said, have a perpetual mental adolescence that I think stems from starting work on a fresh story every day or every week or every mouth and never having time to get to the bottom of anything."

When he went to speak at a distinguished woman's college he was a distinctly uneasy figwhile it is dark three-piece suit and small, neat shoes that rose over his ankles to help support his vast bulk. He spoke shyly of his admiration for William Cobbett, the early 19th-century British writer and journalist, thinking perhaps to shock the ladies by praising so unliterary a writer. They were not shocked, since they admired Cobbett, too and the person who ended mired Cobbett; too, and the person who ended by being shocked was Liebling himself, when he saw supper. It was a plate of scrapple. Just scrapple. Even a few side orders of bourbon did not help.

"Joe was not happy with women of a high class," Waverley Root says. "Of course, he liked low life and I guess he liked low women,

He considered himself a worldly, resourceful city type, although late in life he took pleasure in rolling in fields of daisies in Long Island. "Stay lovable and tender Joe and yes when necessary sassy," his first, crazed wife wrote him long after they had separated.

Liebling described himself as a chronic, incarable, recidivist reporter — asked why he didn't try fiction, he replied, "What, and make things no?" — and during the quiet years be-fore the present revival his memory was kept alive by journalists who consider him the best thing to happen to the profession since the invention of movable type.

One of the editors of this paper quotes Liebling the way other people quote Shakespeare, "Mens sana in corpore sano," this editor may say by way of greeting, "is a contradiction in terms, the fantasy of a Mr. Have-your-cakeand cat-it." The quotation comes from the start of Liebling's account of a failed attempt to diet. "No sane man can afford to dispense

Hall, they should have known he was not to be

Abbott Joseph Liebling was born into a comfortably off family in New York in 1904. "The finest thing about New York City, I think, is that it is like one of those complicated Renaissance clocks where on one level an allegorical marionette pops out to mark the day of the week, on another a skeleton Death bangs the quarter-hour with his scythe, and on the third the Twelve Apostles do a cakewalk," he later wrote. The variety of the sideshows distracts one's attention from the advance of the hour hand.

After Dartmouth College he worked for newspapers, then joined The New Yorker in 1935. "The people at The New Yorker are so crazy they think I'm normal," he confided to

His enthusiasms ranged from French gener-als for whom he had great flair ("Perhaps it was because in childhood I had owned a picture book illustrated with plates representing Napoleon's battles") to racehorses, Norman cows, broody cooks and Albert Camus, whom he described as dressing like the cartoon character Harold Teen. His daily interests included the New York racing reporter and con man he called Col. John R. Stingo and profiled in his 1955 book, "The Honest Rainmaker," as well as what he described as:

... the worlds of weight lifters, yodelers, tug-boat captains and sideshow barkers, of the book dutchers, sparring partners, song pluggers, sport-ing girls and religious painters, of the dealers in rhesus monkeys and the bishops of churches that they themselves establish under the religious cor-

In addition to his love for New York, early in life Liebling developed other geographical passions. He detested Germany, having had a succession of German governesses: "When I was 5 years old I would rather have died with my milk teeth in a governess' ankle than tie the kind of bow in my shoelaces that she wanted to make me tie. Anyone who had had a German governess could understand Poland."

He adored France, the result of a glorious year in Paris after Dartmouth during which he lived in the Hotel St. Pierre on the rue de l'Ecole de Mèdecine and allegedly studied me-dieval literature. He got $200 a month from home, a princely sum in the 1920s, although be liked later to pretend be lived in near poverty and learned a lot about food, drink and what Root refers to as purchasable women.

The book that probably meant the most to him was "The Republic of Silence" which he compiled from articles published in the French Resistance press. His last dying words were in French: His third wife, the writer Jean Stafford, thought he was probably talking to

His feelings toward England were mixed: He admired English literature and fortitude, despised the cuisine. He wrote about England very well. "The essential thing in writing about Britain is never to try to explain it, and in talking to Britons never try to make them explain themselves," be shrewdly noted. After the war he bought himself a bowler at Lock's and wore one ever after - one size too small, says Root, archetype of the abstemious man. When the other krauts saw him drink water in the Beer my father, like every other New Yorker of his day, always wore one when I was o boy. All I have to do now is learn to shave with a straight razor on a moving railroad train and I will satisfy my time-honored image of adulthood. He attended World War II, from the Phony

War to the Normandy landings, for The New Yorker, having been sent to Paris because the magazine's usual correspondent, Janet Flanner (Genêt), had to return to the United States.

Liebling is a bit snide about Genêt and his admiration for her work is distinctly re-strained. Her worldliness perhaps made him uneasy, and it may be he suspected she was a tougher guy than he was. Their styles are very different: She writes with the sonorous rhythms of the grand siècle, be with the jaunty lyricism of a troubadour or a titi Parisien. He had one irritating habit of inserting "humorous" direct translations from the French such as "Figure to yourself, Monsieur" or "That makes me a droll of an effect."

Liebling wrote very bittle about food, al-though it is his food writing that some people remember best. He was, says Root, a discrimi-nating and companionable eater. He writes about food of a generous purity that we no longer know, and he writes of it in unimagin-

He was not a "gourmet" and while understandably excited by such geniuses as the young woman who was able to make a soufflé that stood up on a flat plate, he loathed the genteel and the overrefined. He was deeply disturbed by the American trend toward tasteless foods — the predilection for sole because it doesn't taste like fish and for vodka because it doesn't taste like booze. God knows what he would think of the Cuisinartsy-craftsy fare now served in New York's better restaurants.

When he writes about food, sometimes it is in a spirit of bravado - can anyone really eat that much? - sometimes to use food as metaphor. Writing from Paris in 1939, be said; "Faith in France was now purely a mystique; a good dinner was our profane form of communion." A French priest describes the German soul as "poorly cooked, like a runny oeuf en gêlée, and so likely to disintegrate at a slight shock, such as the vibration of a loud vulgar voice with an Austrian accent.

In a terrible story of betrayal in wartime Alziers, he makes his dénouement even more awful by pausing to describe a buge banquet, and when he and Root join the exodus of French ministers and their mistresses to wartime Bordeaux, eating becomes a symbol of death and

There was a climate of death in Bordeaux, heavy and unhealthy like the smell of tuberoses. The famous restaurants like the Chapon Fin had never known such business. Men of wealth, heavy-jowled, waxy-faced, wearing an odd ex-pression of relief from fear, waited a couple of hours for tables and then spent all afternoon over their meals, ordering sequences of famous claret rintages as if they were on o tour gastronomique instead of being parties to a catastrophe.

It was Waverley Root's book, "Food of France," that inspired Liebling's memoir, "Be-tween Meals: An Appetite for Paris," now reprinted in "Liebling Abroad." Root's book stirred Liebling's memory of meals past just as unaltered except for the insertion of a couple as firmly established in folklore as Newton's apple or Watt's steam kettle," Liebling begins. characteristically going on to wonder how any-one could be inspired by so small a cake:

In the light of what Proust wrote with so mild stimulus, it is the world's loss that he did not have a heartier appetite. On a dozen Gardiners Island cysters, a bowl of clam chowder, a peck of steamers, some bay scallops, three sautéed softshelled crabs, a few ears of fresh-picked corn, a thin swordfish steak of generous area, a pair of lobsters and a Long Island duck, he might have written a masterpiece.

father of the Talbot. It is claimed that, like the New Journalists, Liebling injected himself into his stories, which is true with a difference: The New Journalists take a center-stage position and are their own best copy: Liebling stood on the edge and prodded and watched.

It is also said that we need Liebling today to illuminate the harrowing events of contemporary life. Surely it would be lovely to have him around but can one honestly wish him to experience nouvelle cuisine, supply-side ethics, de-signer jeans, Airhuses, "Jimmy's World," lifestyle pages, specious distinctions between authoritarian and totalitarian regimes, fast food?

Liza Minnelli is in the middle of a U.S. nour with her "Cabaret" cohort, Joel Grey (to Sept. 4). During the four-night appearance in her home found, she talked about her life and career. She was just visiting, the said, since she and her third husband, scuiptor-designer Mark Geso, make third homes in New York City and Lake Taken, Calif.

About her singing: "I'm an actress, basically. Also a dancer, I don't have a natural voice, so I've had to work on it. How? By singing in the bathroom a lot. By listening to singers I admire. "It just happened," she said. "I was signed to do as Broadway show, 'The Act.' Even though I realized it wasn't working. I had to go through with it. Immediately afterward I did my Carnegio Hall show. I wanted to do something simple so I worked with only 12 musicians around a set patterned after my father's 'Girl Hunt' ballet in 'The Band Wagon' - all steel and Piexiglas with stairways leading to nowhere. I look faiter in the show, because I was three months pregnant."

After that, she'll play Australia and Japan.

She also plans to make three movies in 1982.

First-nighters at the Greek Theater here were awed by her enormous energy. Asked how she trains for such strenuous performances, she said, "I get a lot of sleep. I paint and I scalpt and I study. The Town of Petra: A Fly in Majorcan Amber by Anne Sinclair Mehdevi

ETRA, Majorca -- In the midst of Majorca's hyped-up and bectic summer tempo attention was recently focused on the drowsy inland town of Petra, virtually unchanged since the 15th century.

With a population under 4,000 (an increase of about 1,500 in the past 300 years), Petra has managed to remain, like a fly in amber, a historical anachronism whose only concessions to the present century seem to be a few television acrials and electric street lamps.

Unlike a fly in amber, however, Petra has no air of deadness. It is neither a ruin nor a carefully preserved museum piece but rather a living remnant of the past that has somehow survived intact. Down the narrow, geometrically laid out streets women shop, boys and girls in eans hurry past on bicycles and babies are wheeled by clutching the latest plastic toy. There are no high rises, no factories and no hotels; there is no traffic, no pollution and practically no noise.

The single dominant building is a large Gothic church, free of the doodads and statuary gimmickry that tend to spoil so many. It was completed in 1482, 10 years before Cohumbus discovered America, and has remained unaltered except for the insertion of a couple of naive painted altars and chapels. The church and most of the houses have been built of a locally quarried sandstone called mare: that gives the place a tonal unity.

Twenty-three visitors from San Juan Capistrano (Petra's sister city in California), led by the mayor, attended ceremonies here on June 27 in honor of Fray Junipero Serra, founder of nine California missions, including the one at Capistrano. Serra was born in Petra.

The visitors were struck not only by the harmony and quiet dignity of the town as an architectural unity, but by the old-fashioned entertainment given them - a sedate, graceful country dance before the eburch altar and a parade of one ancient man, with a drummer, who managed to draw from a xeremies - an instrument akin to a bagpipe — the most lilt-ing and delicate music totally unrelated to the groans and wheezes that the Scots produce. They also visited the house where the California missionary was born in 1713.

Junipero Serra died at the Carmel Mission in California in 1784 and left Majorca for the New World in 1749, but he is spoken of by the townsmen as if he were personally known to them. Ask anyone directions to the Serra house, and one is sure to get an answer like,

I think it's locked, but a neighbor always has the key. Here, I'll take you. The house is identical to hundreds of others and is not even marked by a plaque. Since the family died out in the 18th century, it went to new owners and finally was lost track of. In 1930 the local schoolmaster, searching through church records, found the address. The house was still intact, though it was being used as a stable and a pigpen. The owners were willing to sell and the Rotary Club of Palma bought it for the then astronomical sum of 50,000 pesetas (about $550 at today's exchange). It was deeded by the Rotarians to the city of San Francisco, which still owns it.

The house is narrow and flush with houses on either side so that the ground floor is rather like a tunnel, stone-paved and windowless. There is an entrance room, a kitchen and two bedrooms, one for the residents and one for the family mule. Upstairs is the hedroom in which Junipero Serra was born and an atticlike storeroom used for harnesses, food storage and farm tools, for Serra's parents were illiterate peasants, though he himself became a master at Latin composition and rhetoric.

The visitor is at first shocked hy the cramped bareness and severity of this dwelling

"Father Serra? Oh, his house is down this way. In which Serra fived with his parents and sister. Yet after the initial jolt, a reassessment takes place: The sparse but handsome furniture authentic period pieces, wormholes and all—the cool udiness of the whitewashed walls and the back garden aflame with geraniums impress one as a fitting place for civilized human beings to be born and to die in. There is no sense of the soul-destroying squalor that city slums convey so forcibly.

Because there is sull no electricity in the house, visiting hours are between 10:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m. There is no charge. The retired California seaman who serves as director is there every day except Tuesdays and Wednesdays and is a walking encyclopedia of Serriana. A few paces away is a small modern museum, built in the Petra style, displaying a rather dusty collection of miscellary including, inex-plicably, photographs of President John F. Kennedy and his brother Robert as well as some fossilized shells.

When a Hall of Statuary was planned for the Capitol in Washington, each state was requested to name two of its most admired historical figures to be represented there. Califor-nia's officials unanimously chose Serra. A pilgrimage to his birthplace is an easy undertaking. Petra is about 30 miles from Palma over well-surfaced and clearly marked roads.

Paris' Glass Galleries Open Up the City's Stone Front

The French publisher, A.C.E. Editeur, recently published "Passages," a book of photographs of Paris' 19th-century glass-covered areades tak-en since the 1930s by Robert Doisneau with a text by Bernard Delvaille. Below, Xiane Germain visits a few of Paris' 19 arcades.

by Xiane Germain

ARIS — When my family arrived in Paris just after World War II, we started a small silk business in the rue du Sentier, Paris' textile area. I was 11 at the time, and my father often sent me to Schiffer's in the Passage du Caire to fetch our stationery. There were a number of printers there, though today only Schiffer's remains.

The Passage du Caire, built in 1799, was one of Paris' first covered arcades and owes its sphinx heads and bas-reliefs to Napoleon's Égyptian campaign. Beneath its glass arches, men and women once handcarted heavy silk rolls to the many wholesale shops. Voices echoed up and down the network of three galleries. To me, it was magical: I felt I was Alice in Wonderland, lost in a gigantic aquarium. My heart beat like the rattling printing machines, but I loved the smell of ink, the excitement.

This was my first covered-glass arcade in Paris, but little by little I got to know them all, even the more shabby ones, like Passage Brady at 33 boulevard de Strasbourg, now a kind of souk stacked with all kinds of exotic products. Indian music wafts out of a record shop along with the smells of mint, curry and mango. Sudexpenses.

Then there's the Passage des Princes, 5 boul-evard des Italiens, where the craftsmen of L'Ecume de Mer have been making pipes since 1855. I used to love watching the men model meerschaum into pipes shaped like lions and woodcocks.

A door in the Passage Jouffroy, 10 boulevard Montmartre, leads to the Musée Grévin, Paris' wax and horror museum, where you can see Charlotte Corday stabbing Marat in his bathtub. Old and new shops live together here in harmony: dealers in old postcards, stamps and records, a charming toy store, an oriental bazaar, the Hotel Chopin, unchanged since my childhood, and Le Grand Boulevard restaurant, where dinner is served by waiters on roller skates. You can spend hours in this vast gallery, tasting oriental pastries, browsing through the Librainie Paul Vulin, an indoor bouquiniste or simply people-watching.

Just across the street, the Passage des Panoramas was built in 1800 by Robert Fulton, the American engineer and painter who invented submarines, torpedos and steamboats. Fulton had a space in the passage where he showed perfectly painted views of Paris, Jerusalem and

Rome — from inside a 100-foot-wide cylinder. Today, at No. 47, Monsieur Stern will help you draw your genealogical tree or engrave a coat of arms, bookplate or visiting card for you in his wood-paneled Napoleon III and Re-

Walking south, through the magnificent place des Victoires, you reach the elegant Galerie Véro-Dodat, a smaller but well-preserved arcade with false marble columns and a checkered pavement. It houses the Art Deco dealer. Eric Philippe, and a great men's and women's hatmaker who always has a hat so simple, so thic, that you won't be able to resist. At No. 14. Entering these glass and steel cathedrals built long before the Eiffel Tower, one penetrates the stone front of the city. The Best Swimming Holes of Paris

by Judith Sullivan

ARIS — Residents and businessmen watching the mass exodus of Parisians going off on vacation this weekend should not feel sorry for themselves: They will have the swimming pools of Paris and its suburbs all to themselves this month.

The would-be beachgoer's best bet lies 10 kilnmeters south of the city on the express metro line (at La Croix de Berny on the RER line Châtelet-St. Rémy-lès-Chevreuse). At the edge of the lush Parc de Sceaux in the shadow of a chateau once inhabited by Louis XIV's famous finance minister Colbert (now a museum of the Ile de France where concerts are given in August and September) stands an Olympic pool surrounded by 17th-century for-mal gardens and acres of lawn and forest.

The pool - a five-minute walk from the RER - is clean and has a cafeteria, ping pong tables, two diving boards. Muzak and a friendly manager, who at non-peak hours takes groups jogging through the magnificent grounds. And one can picnic or sunbathe on the grassy area on the far side of the diving

The only hitch? Never try it on Sundays. advises the manager, as the pool area tends to reach its 5,000-person capacity. Otherwise, it's a short, worthwhile trip — whether to swim, sunbathe without tops or visit the castle, a short but beautiful hike away. The adjacent tennis courts are rentable by the hour. Pool admission is 10 francs; tel; 660.75.30.

St. Germain-en-Laye (at the end of another RER line) also has a pool built in a lush royal garden, that of the chateau where Louis XIII was born, now a museum of Gallo-Roman and Dark Ages artifacts found in France, on a plateau overlooking the Seine and Paris. The indoor pool is small but it has a grassy outdoor sundeck, a parking lot and permission to déjeuner sur l'herbe — a rarity in France. Admission is 12 francs for adults, 2 for children; tel: 451.50.20.

Less scenic but closer to town is the pool in the Courbevoie shopping center in La Défense, the high-rise complex just west of Paris. The Olympic pool is clean and new and its grassy solarium attractive, despite the view over a highway. Admission is 9 francs for adults, 7.50 for children; tel: 788.03.33.

In Paris itself, the Piscine Deligny on the Seine below the Pont de la Concorde is the most interesting of Paris' watering spots. Built in 1785, it is the last pool set in a floating barge. Its main attraction is its clientele: the beautiful people showing off sleek bodies in designer swimsuits. To the pleasure of Peeping Toms who lean over the bridge, the third-floor deck is for nude sunbathing (no children allowed). Indeed, the high admission (18.50 francs), large crowds, dirty cabins and water make this tiny pool more of an attraction for singles than swimmers. Open 8:30 a.m. to 7 p.m. every day. Tel: 551.72.15. Metro: Concorde or Gare d'Orsay.

More chic is the pool on the 24th floor of the Sofitel Sevres Hotel in the 15th arrondissement. It not only has a sauna, gym room and sun lamps included with the 60-franc admission price (35 francs for the pool and sun deck), but real live celebrities: movie stars, pop singers, models and writers.

The domed swimming area resembles a greenhouse: the pool set in the midst of a garden of hanging plants. A wide balcony surrounds it and a restaurant that serves, on warm days only, an 80-franc, all-you-can-eat buffet. The view is not terrific, but you can glimpse the Eiffel Tower. On weekends the pool is closed except to members and hotel guests. 8 rue Louis Armand, Paris 15, tel: 554.95.00. Metro: Balard. Open 11 a.m. to 9 p.m. every day except Sunday.

Much larger and almost as swanky is the large, outdoor Piscine Molitor behind the peripherique highway at the edge of the 16th ar-rondissement. Located in a quiet back street, it has one eccentricity: its elaborate dress code. The ground level, open to all, is mostly for kids, the second for men and women in bottom-only suits, the third for women (only) who wish to tan in their "integral costume," as the lifeguard put it. The snack bar, changing rooms and tollets are dirty. At 8 avenue de la Porte de Molitor, Paris 16, tel: 651.10.61. Metro: Porte d'Auteuil. Open 9:30 to 7:30 p.m. every day. Admission: 15 francs.

The City of Paris pools (indoors with out door sundecks) may not be glamorous, but they can be more fun, because the kids who use them are having such a good time. Admission is 5.60 francs for adults, 2.80 for children. Open in summer from 2 to 7:30 p.m. on Mondays, from 7 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. Tuesday-Friday and from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sundays. and from 8 a.m. to 6 p.m. on Sundays.

Especially intriguing, if small, is the ponl called Butte-aux-Cailles, on a hill where quails once lived. The water comes from an artesian well 700 meters below the ground, and the manager claims this makes it especially clean, its redbrick building and bleacher-style solarium make one forget the ugly surroundings and the distance from the center of town. At 5 place Paul Verlaine, Paris 13, tel: 589.60.05. Metro: Place d'Italie.

Across from the Hilton and beneath the Eiffel Tower is the 25-meter-long Piscine Emile Anthoine. The view from its mosaiclike blueand-green solarium and the shabby locker and restrooms do not recommend it, but no pool is more convenient. At 9 rue Jean Rey, Paris 15, tel; 567.10.20. Metro Bir-Hakeim.

Though public, the Piscine Heart de Montherlant, in the 16th arrondissement on the edge of the Bois de Boulogne, caters to the French Lacoste set (it also has tennis courts and a sundeck). Americans rave over its virtues, but French regulars agree that the lifeguards bring out the worst in French arrogance and bad manners. At 32 boulevard de Lannes, Paris 16, tel: 503.03.28. Metro: Porte Dauphine.

What's in a (Hong Kong) Name?

by Harry Rolnick

ONG KONG — Tourists here shop around for cheap name-brand clocks, clothes and consoles. Residents shop around for names. Which are free.

Funny names, weird names, strangely evoca-tive names. Mistranslations from Chinese to English, or monosyllabic Chinese names with unintentional English pumning value. All of these are fair enough grist for party and pub banter, as a fitting respite when the talk isn't banter, as a fitting respite when the talk isn't of the stock exchange and the current price of bullion. And in Hong Kong, where 94 percent of the population speak Chinese as a first language, yet where English is the only "official" language, mistranslations are inevitable.

"Hang On," for example, is a perfectly respectable Chinese title meaning "forever peaceful." But when one comes across a bill-board proclaiming "Hang On Investment Company," one would reckon that the management believes a bullish market is right around the corner. Likewise, the Hang On Cafe hints that sooner or later they'll get that Cafe hints that sooner or later they'll get that dumpling recipe right, if only customers would wail around. Hang On Motors sound rather dodgy, and Hang On Tailors sound pretty wing Fat Shoes sound perfectly awful (though Wing Fat Bleaching Company might be a breakthrough in cleaning). On the other hand, Wing Fat Restaurant and Wing Fat Coffee Cakes are a little greasy in English.

lnnocently enough, Wing Fat actually means "forever prosperous."

Then there's the Hop On People. "Peace together" is the simple enough English rendering. But one wonders about the durability of the Hop On Glass Company (or is this a simple peasant dance performed after the harvesting of the glass?). There's no need to worry about the convenience of Hop On Bicycle Company, and racers might find it good luck.

Hong Kong signs in Chinese English.

Then there's the sick category. Man Fat Meat Company doesn't sound too healthy in non-anthropophagous societies like Hong Kong, and Man Fat Weaving isn't a suitable hobby for even the most senile old people,

Other clothiers aren't much more appetizing. The Mee Fat Garment Company takes pride in catering for the plumper denizens of Hong Kong. And Fat Tai Custom Tailors go in for the 1960s look.

Lee Kee Garments and Lee Kee Boots sell everywhere despite their truth-in-advertising turers, but so far all we have is Tak Kee Pens.

The Tak Kee family isn't too bad either. In Chinese, Tak Kee simply means "goodness," but Tak Kee Egg Stalls don't sound especially good. (Unless this be an old Chinese maxim on telling good produce: "Tak Kee Egg Stalls, but Good Egg Rolls Right Along"). One would hesitate going to the Tak Kee Auto Service, the Tak Kee Construction Co. or the Tack Kee Flower Stall. And few would have the time of day for Tack Kee Plastic Watch Company.

And while no conservationist is buying ivory these days, even the present U.S. Secretary of the Interior would think twice about buying a bird sculpture from the Tack Wing Ivory Fac tory.

Wing On is one of the largest companies in Hong Kong with many structures around the main island. And it is surely providential that the World Wildlife Fund has its offices in the Wing On Life Co. One is inspired to pen an 18th-century poem: Wing On, Life!

These names have their unwitting ailusions.

A second category keeps original English names that lose something in the good inten-tions of the utlers. The Honey Moon Brassiere Co., Everlasting Artificial Flowers, the Chum-my Good Friend Plastic Products Co. and an obviously jocular Good Fun Co., as well as inebriated dinners at the Good Happy Restanrant. There's also Viewspoint Optical Indus-tries — though this shouldn't hold much com-petition to the leering, ogling, salaciously titled Wing Kee Optical Co.

For those down on their luck, there's no need to buy cheap tranquilizers at Po Man's. Medical Co. Not when they can get a loan in the Friendly Loan Co., which is located in the which not only sounds like a homonym of the English but is propintous as well.

For example, the Sin Sea Building means "leader" in Chinese, but it has been translated into the Sincere Building. The Yee See Building (meaning "keeping up" in Chinese) has become the Easey (sic) Commercial Building. And Ho Man Motor Company (named after the owner) has been translated into something out of the futuristic society with Human Motors company. tors company.

Gone, alas, are names from another era.
Old-timers in Hong Kong still nostalgically talk of the sound of Tong Kee Piano Co. and the Fat Fun Co. For broken-hearted lovers, there was the Wu Clinic, And for lovers of the long-winded, there was the Modern Civility Innovation Society and the Everlasting Incombustable (sic) Celluloid Works.

by Nino Lo Bello

REGENZ, Austria - Right or wrong, Bregenz, lying at the intersection of Austria, Switzerland, Germany and Liechtenstein, has been described (1) as a German city that has a Swiss culture but belongs to Austria; (2) as an Austrian city that is really Swiss but belongs to Germany, (3) as a Swiss city that is really German but waves the Austrian flag.

Bregenz may never displace Vienna as a destination or Salzburg as the "in" summer festi-val — but this delightful, compact city at the eastern end of Lake Constance has the last reasonably priced music festival in central Europe. German, Swiss and Austrian tourists who can't afford the Salzburg or Vienna music festivals flood here to the world's only floating music festival (this year, through Aug. 23).

It all goes back to the end of World War Il, when people sat on barrels at the edge of the harbor to watch a performance of Mozart's Bastien und Bastienne," written when he was 12. Since then, over three decades and at a cost of nearly $19 million, Bregenz has crected a "festival precinct." Last summer the huge new Festival House was officially opened.

Bregenz's new floating stage on the lake is the largest of its kind, with entrances from shore and lake and an acting area of some 6,000 square feet. Some of the action takes place right on the water, as in the case of Johann Strauss' "A Night in Venice" and Wagner's "Flying Dutchman.

The new semicircular stand seats 4,325 people. One problem that has not quite been resolved is the clouds of mosquitoes that also elect to attend the performance, though Bregenz officials take considerable pains to discourage these nonpaying six-legged visitors. The highlight of this summer's Bregenz fesuval is a production of Leonard Bernstein's "West Side Story" nn the floating stage (Aug. 1, 5, 7, 12, 14, 15, 19, 21, 22). Alternating with it will be Verdi's "Otello" in the Festspielhaus, starring Pedro Lavirgen on Aug. 3 and 6. Anna Tomowa-Sintow will sing Desdemona.

Other events include plays like "Hamlet," "Liliom" (Aug. 17. 18, 20) and "Die Bürger in Wien" (Aug. 1) and orchestra concerts by the Vienna Symphony and the Austrian Radio Symphony Orchestra with Karia Ricciarelli. José Carreras and Nicolai Ghiaurov as soloists. Haydn's opera, "L'Incontro Improvviso." will be performed at the spectacular Hohenems Castle.

Bregenz's ancient quarter overlooks the thousand-year-old walls that contain the imposing emblem of the town, St. Martin's Tower, built in 1602 and the first baroque building nn Lake Constance. The upper town is full of lush squares and half-timbered houses.

The forest and mountains around have much to offer hikers, especially the five-mile trail that follows the Austrian shore of Lake Constance (known in German as the Bodensee). The idyllic village of Fluh, set on a high ridge about two miles from the center of town, is a good starting point for walks through the forest and hills.

One of Bregenz's top scenic attractions is its 3,200-font-high mountain, the Pfander. In the summer, a cable car leaves every half hour for the six-minute ride to the top, which provides a 40-mile panoramic view of 240 Alpine peaks and the entire Lake Constance region. (You can also drive there). At the top is the huge, and caption peaks are of the street of self-service Berghaus Pfänder, one of the two

This features many of the typical Vorarlberg dishes and other Austrian specialties, not to mention international cuisine. For the evening rôtisserie service, the Kinz family and staff open up an additional 120 seats. Another Bregenz restaurant deserving special mention is in the middle of town. Run by the Huber family, the Gasthof Zoll is Bre genz's best approximation of a two-star restaurant: French artichokes in Hollandaise sauce peppersteak in green pepper sauce with butter noodles, melon with port, shrimp with fresh herbs in a rice ring and fresh mangoes with walnul ice cream on New Zealand kiwis.

Bregenz caters to outdoor types, too. Besides three beaches and facilities for all aquaric sports, there's a steam-driven train for hire on the narrow-gauge Bregenz Forest Railroad that goes to Bezau. Attached to the train is a period-furnished buffel car, a good vantage point to relax in as you chug through one magnificent setting after another.

The Vorarlberg Provincial Museum has exhibits that date from primeval times, artifacts from the Roman era and a large collection of paintings by Vorariberg's best-known painter Angelika Kauffmann (1741-1807), whose self-portrait graces Austria's 100-schilling notes.

Though virtually forgotten loday, Kauff-mann was nuce the toast of the art circles in Rome and Lundon and became the subject of twn 19th-century novels. Romantically linker with Sir Joshua Reynnlds, she was one of the signatories of the famous peution to the King of England for the establishment of the Royal Academy. In 1766 Sir Joshua painted her, and she returned the compliment with an oil that is considered one of her most famous works Portrait of Sir Joshua Reynolds, Age 46."

After her first husband's death, she married Antonio Zucchi, a Venetian artist then living in England. At her death in Rome, the entire art community marched to her tomb and, as at the burial of Raphael, two of her best pictures were carried in the procession.

Hugging Lake Constance, Bregenz boasts a lakeside promenade five kilometers long, curving with the shape of the waterfront and running right through the stands of the outdoor theater. Ideal for jogging, the tree-shaded pro-menade is a stroller's paradise even in the hottest weather, waited by gentle breezes from the quiet lake.

Founded 100 years ago in 1881, at the time of Garibaldi's unification of Italy, it was to be the symbol of the country's proud new identity. It was to serve every citizen. And it was to display only contemporary art — works by ity ing Italian arists or those dead no more than live years — a far cry from the readingnal collections of masterworks all over the peninsula, to which tourists and travelers had socied for

Gradually foreign painters fiving in Italy were also admitted and eventually the new gallery was housed in a splendid Beile Epoque palace specially built for it when Rome was engaged in an urban sensoral spree after the turn of the contract.

Today, the spacious edifice, surmounted by winged stance in the middle of the vast and leary Villa Borghese park, is an instructive, pleasing but also bewildering place. To Americans used to having their art presented to them on a silver platter, in ready-made, carefully planned presentations arranged in stylish buildings under perfect lighting, the National Gallery may at first seem strange.

There are rows of columns and a heroic Camova statue towering over American Mini-mal art; rustic scenes and flamboyam operatic canvases on mythological scenes and near-impressionism of the late 19th century; 20th-century art, figurative or abstract - often with too little breathing space. Internationally known artists are mixed with those famous only in Italy. Op and Pop art stand by kinetic scalptures slowly winking in a darkened room. An inner court with orange trees and an outer garden sprout the latest in Minimal sculpture.

It is a complex and varied place, to say the least. But this also makes it a lascinating challenge to the perceptive visitor. There are discoveries to be made, treasures to be found. The National Gallery is a museum you work at.

Above anything cise, a museum must present its own history, not art history in general," explains Prof. Giorgio De Marchis, the direcfor since 1978, "otherwise all museums would

Here the roots go back to the 19th century, when painters turned against rhetorical neo-historism. In Lombardy the "Scapigliatura" (stagginess school) evolved, while in Tuscany aligned with Garibaldi, made their first ex-eriments. Nicknamed "Macchiaioli" (Daubers), these near-Impressionists were not concerned with imagined events and antique deeds but with the ordinary views and details of their own daily life. Fattori, Lega, Signorini, Cecioni, Morelli and so on are here shown at their best, in all their sober clarity.

From the "Divisionists" at the turn of the century, concerned with the analysis of light, it is only a short step to the early Balla and Boccions, who were to become the leaders of Franrism, the dynamic but intrinsically Italian movement that ran parallel with Cubism and Constructivism. Another specifically Italian school, "metaphysical painting," the foreruncer of French Surrealism, with De Chirico, Savinio, Carra and even Morandi, is also well represented, as is the late Impressionist De Piere with his vibrant cill life. Pisis, with his vibrant still lifes.

Adriano Cecioni oil, c. 1885.

"Roman school" of the 1920s, with Scipione, Donghi, Maiai and Antonietta Raphael, celebrates the noontime brightness and the night mysteries of what was then a lazily traffic-free city. It is followed by divergent figurative painters, among them Casorati and Viani, and the compelling sculptures of Arturo Martini, in a style quite his own.

Fascism, like all new revolutionary movements, at first favored revolutionary Futurism. But once the regime itself was stabilized, it also demanded a safe and static art. Eventually the rich heritage of the museum was relegated to the stacks, and it became a showcase only for propaganda art, blowups of Mussolini's parades and conquests.

So it was just an array of Fascist photography that Dr. Palma Bucarelli found when she was made director of the museum after World War II. She had to start from scratch. After resurrecting the existing collections, she began in collaboration with her close colleague. the art historian and recent mayor of Rome. Ginlio Carlo Argan - the ardnons task of transforming the museum into a truly modern one. She not only made the government ac-quire established modern masters from abroad, but early in their careers encouraged such native abstractionists as Colla, Capogrossi, Burri, Fontana and Turcato, long before they became internationally known. She mounted the first Rothko exhibition in Europe in 1963. Besides adventurous forays into Op and Pop art, she bought Gastone Novelli's hittersweet, graffiti-covered oils, which follow the linear lyticism begun by Osvaldo Licini and in some ways are related to the work of the Rome-based American Cy Twom-

Young Italian "Conceptualists" were discovered early by her, so that today we can be grateful for a room full of pretend-archaic tools and implements (a caveman's shield made of turkey feathers, giant caterpillars con-structed from household brushes) by Pino Pascali, who had a flair for the allusiveness of textures. He died in a motorcycle accident in 1968 when only 33. When in 1971 Bucarelli organized a commemorative show for another Conceptualist who also died young, Piero Manzoni, 1933-1963, there were objections in parliament and a public outery. For in this retrospective there were not only collages made of fresh-painted rolls, angel's hair, bed sheets — ordinary surfaces made highly expressive - but a milelong "painted line" on a rolled up canvas scroll; photographs of how Manzoni had put his sig-nature on a nude model in 1961 and so made her "artist's work;" sealed balloons supposedly inflated with "artist's breath" and, last not least, little cans neatly labeled merda d'artista. Manzoni, like his granddaddies, the Dadaists, was not just an enfant terrible and a wit, but an acute and poetic social critic as well.

After a stern but beneficent reign, Dr. Bucarelli retired in 1974. Under her successor, De Marchis, the museum is in the process of re-organization. He realizes that the public has changed profoundly: "It has increased 30 per-cent," he says, "and there are 20,000 visitors monthly in a city of 3.5 million inhabitants. It is not made up of tourists or casual visitors, but mostly Romans who have made museumgoing a habit. They don't dumbly contemplate pedigreed images anymore. They want to grow and so stimulate the museum to grow."

When beside overhauling and replenishing the permanent collections, the director accepted interesting exhibitions arranged by Europe-an neighbors, there were no difficulties. But when he organized "Italian Abstract Art. 1909-1959" last year, selecting only 10 artists, he was taken to task. Critics and excluded artists cried that the choices were too arbitrary, the grouping historically misleading. When he had been Italian cultural attache in Japan, De Marchis had often been asked to explain what exactly was Italian abstract art. I wanted this show to be the answer." It was. And in its lamented selectiveness it was a oleasant contrast to the usual mammoth shows on given movements arranged by museums. The current exhibition, to Oct. 4, carries the work of 50 Italian artists and was selected by 25 of those well-known critics who, alas, dominate and shape the scene here rather too deliberately. Aiming to "feel the pulse" of the current art scene in Italy, it is as controversial as last year's show - but ampler, including not only the older pure-abstractionists, the Mini-malists and the Conceptualists, the new figurativist, but also members of the "post-avantgarde" movement who are presently making such a splash in New York. There are more women, even if only a handful at that.

In October there will be a grand retrospective of De Chirico, the master of metaphysical painting. His haunting canvases celebrating the melancholy splendors of classic Greece and modern lealy will come home from collections all over the world.

A show of modern Eskimo prints just now in progress, complete with igloo, audiovisual reports on Eskimo life and printmaking workshops for schoolchildren, is a good illustration of the kind of public service the muse-

As an institution vividly reflecting Italy's sense of history, its thinking, manners and organization methods, the National Gallery of Modern Art is one of the most intriguing of contemporary museums. Its director hopes: A visitor should come out of the museum a different person." They do indeed.

Closed on Monday, the Notional Gallery of Modern Art is open weekdays 9 a.m. to 7 p.m., weekends 9 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

Old Playing Cards Suit Few Auction Buyers

Je Main tila

ONDON - If minor sales at the end of the season mean anything, the market as a whole seems to be gently slipping.
On July 28 there was one of those enchanting sales that take place once in a blue moon. A whole collection of playing cards from the 17th to the 20th century was being sold at Sotheby's. Michael Heseltine, head of the modern book described to the modern back described to the ern book department; had produced a illustrated catalogue as interesting as an art book.

The earliest and by far the finest cards were French. There was an extraordinary set designed in the late 17th century by Stefano della Bella ("Etienne," as he was called during his long stay in France).
Each card represents a different country with a symbolic figure and a long caption in the lower half. That sold moderately well at £490, twice the upper estimate.

But the "good" price chiefly reflects the buyer's opinion that the set was actually engraved in Stefano della Bella's time, while the cataloguer had obviously questioned that dating by supplying the question mark. It is probably worth a lot more. Otherwise, many lots sold well under the estimate.

The trend was even more marked the day before at a sale that consisted in the main of Himalayan and Indian artifacts, Greek and Roman antiquities and a good deal of glassware from the ancient world. Tibetan art was weak and Indian art weaker still, This could be tested particularly with a group of metal vessels from the estate of the late Mrs. L.M. Dixon, which had been collected in India in the mid-19th century. An 18th-century brass ewer, which had been bought in once at and a collection of 11 vessels including one very fine vase cast around 1600 was sold for £33.45. Later in the sale, there were few marvelous bargains to be made in the ancient glass section. One of the finest glass ewers I have seen in the market, probably fifthor sixth-century Syrian, was bought for £189.50 by a Japanese

This definite weakness of the market only set in around May and has become more perceptible in the last few weeks. It has therefore oot affected the overall figures for the 1980-81 seasoo ending oo July 31, just released by Christie's and Sotheby's.

Oo the face of it, these point to continuing growth concerning Sotheby's, whose worldwide sales totaling £317 million have increased by 34 percent over the 1979-80 season. Making allowance for world inflation and monetary adjustments, that still leaves a rise of well over 20 perceot - quite an achievement. Christie's sales totaled £177.3 million, an increase of 16 percent over the previous year.

A closer look at the figures. however, shows some slightly dis-turbing trends. London's share of the market is slowly but relentlessly whittling away. Sotheby's regis-tered a 10 percent nominal in-crease, which does out even make up for the inflatioo rate - net sales amounting this season to £93 million. The United States, in contrast, is soaring. Sotheby's total for U.S. sales rose to $290 million (£157 million), an 18 percent increase in dollars and a 48 percent increase as measured in sterling, according to Sotheby's calcula-tions. Christie's sales with $130 millioo (£66 million) rose by 33

Other factors have belped keep up or raise net figures in a way that conceals some of the current difficulties of the art market. Sotheby's figures are particularly revealing. The Far East plays an increasingly important role. Hong Kong figures went up by 175 per-cent, thanks, chiefly, to the two Chow sales in November and May.

Switzerland, on the other hand, achieved the highest growth rate in European sales — 87 percent, primarily accounted for by jewelry. silver, and Fabergé objects, bought to varying degrees as commodities.

A special section in Sotheby's report is titled "Growth of Collecting Areas." It shows that sales of Japanese works of art went up by 115 percent (£5.3 millioo) and sales of Chinese works of arr by 103 percent (£11.5 million). The two booming sectors in Western art are U.S. and Canadian paintings, up by 115 percent (£20 millioo), followed by Impressionist and cootemporary art, up by 57 percent (£59.2 million). The latter figure reflects the brilliant autumn and spring sales, in contrast to the much duller sales of May in New York and late June in London.

Christie's figures, released in different and more detailed form. confirm some of the trends outlined by Sorbeby's report. Jewelry sales went up by one-third in Geneva and New York. The aggregate total of silver sales in Geneva, Rome, Holland and New York increased by more than half - up to £3.6 million — but slipped very slightly in London — £4.3 million. And Impressionist and modern masters went up by nearly 50 per-cent — up to £30 million. At the other end of the spectrum, drawings and watercolors dropped by 50 percent at Christie's standing at just over £2 millioo and antiquities and primitive art went down by two-thirds. English and cootinental porcelain. clocks and watches, antique arms and armor are all down. These categories are all highly significant because they are genuine collectors and connoisseurs' fields, virtually unexplored by investors. The drop here, however much it may owe to chance, tells a lot about the oew reticence of truly private buyers.

On Debt Too Tough

WARSAW -- Polish government officials are complaining that terms Western banks laid down for rescheduling Poland's debts are too tough.

excheduling Poland's debts are expected to cost the West German to tough.

The officials appear prepared to the property of th fight for further concessions, argu-ing that Poland cannot afford asditional burdens involved in the terms and needs, rather, a return tion to carry out its recovery plan. The immediate problem, they add, is one of liquidity.

The official Polish position as well as the precise details of the rescheduling proposal offered by 460 Western banks fast seek have not been made public.

The Poish government had promised to give Western bankers its answer this week, but in talks with non-government sources in Poland and Britain, the view em-erges that the Poles see the Western terms as unfavorable to their country and expect any new negotiations on the proposals to be Oil Output Cut lengthy.

The Western proposal, which was significantly toughened after U.S. banks objected to European plans, would postpone repayment of 95 percent of the principal on Poland's debt to private leaders due during the last three quarters of 1981 but would require full payment of interest. The banks have estimated the amount involved in the rescheduling at about $2.37 bil-

Repayment of this deferred debt would start after four years. It would be completed in 7½ years, but the average length of repayment would be 5% years. The interest rate charged would be either I've percent over the London interbank offered rate, which now is 18% percent, or the rate supulated in the original agreement, whichever is higher.

Legal Fees

In addition, the Poles would have to pay a flat I percent rescheduling fee and absorb all the costs of meetings and legal fees in the rescheduling negotiations. That could run into "hundreds of thousands of dollars," one source

The Poles had hoped to extract terms from the bankers that were as favorable as those granted earlier this year by government holders of Polish debt. Western governments agreed to defer 90 percent of the principal and interest on $2.9 billion in public debt. Polish officials calculate that equivalent reited in its private loans, where creditors insist on the full payment of interest, requires the rescheduling of all the principal. Some financiai specialists in Warsaw argue that even more concessions are reeded to make private terms as favorable as the government terms. When Poland makes its response, which is now expected its request for rescheduling all the principal. In addition, it is expected to ask to extend the rescheduling to the first quarter of this year. when $1 billion was repaid. Finally, the Poles would like to reduce the interest rate on the rescheduled debt as much as 14 percent Officials do not expect to obtain all these concessions, but they argue that many of them are necessary to

VW Golf Gets 'Type' Approval in Japan

TOKYO - Japan's Transport Ministry said Friday that the West German Volkswagen Golf, of which about 14,000 were sold here last year. will be the first imported car to get a "type certificate" in Japan.

It said the issuance of the certificate in August will simplify the complicated automobile import procedures here, criticized abroad as a major non-tariff barrier to car imports into Japan.

The car cleared all Japanese safety and emission control standards and will be given the same treatment as domestic qualified cars, that is, it will not be required to undergo one-by-one testing and inspection after landing, the ministry said.

British Petroleum to Close Refinery in 1982

LONDON - British Petroleum Co. Ltd. said Friday its BP oil subsidiary will close its Kent oil refinery on the Isle of Grain on the Thames stuary by the end of 1982.

Oil processing will be phased out beginning early next year, BP said. The decision to close the refinery was brought about by the decline in demand for oil products. The site itself will continue to be used after the closure of the refinery as a product terminal, and lubricating oil blending and packaging also will continue there, BP said.

Honda to Recall Cars After FTC Agreement

From Agency Dispatches WASHINGTON - The Federal Trade Commission has announced that owners of 700,000 Honda cars sold in the United States may be entitled to new fenders or cash reimbursement because of a rusting problem. It was the first such FTC action involving a Japanese auto firm. American Honda Motor, the Japanese firm's U.S. subsidiary, has agreed to provide repairs or reimbursement to owners of 1975-78 Accord and Civic cars for a rust condition on front fenders caused by a design defect, according to the FTC. But a Honda spokesman said Friday in Tokyo that probably only 60,000 of the cars would need to be recalled. He said the cost to the company would be about $10 million.

France to Sell Export Company to U.S. Firm AP-Dow Jones

CHICAGO - Walter E. Heller International said Friday it reached an agreement with the French government to take a 51-percent interest in Cofacredit, a French export organization. The Chicago-based financing company, which operates in 21 countries, would not disclose the price of the transaction. Heller said it was the first time the Socialist government in France had agreed to sell a government-controlled company to private interests.

U.S. Said to Okay Pipe-Machine Deal to Russia Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON - Caterpillar Tractor has been told it will get a longawaited export license to sell 100 pipe-laying machines to the Soviet Union in a decision that could have far-reaching implications for U.S.-Soviet trade.

A source familiar with the decision said it was conveyed in a telephone call from Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige to Caterpillar chairman Lee Morgan. The source said the decision followed a memorandum to Mr. Baldrige from White House Counsellor Edwin Meese 3d indicating President Reagan's approval for the $40 million deal.

Du Pont Bid Gets Qualified U.S. Approval

From Agency Disputches
NEW YORK — The Justice Department has given its conditional approval to the proposed $7.3 bil-tion takeover of Conoco by Du Pont, the chemical company said

Du Pont said it was advised by the department that the only aspect of the proposed merger that raised antitrust problems was the acquisition of Conoco's interest in a petrochemical joint venture with Monsanto at Chocolate Bayou,

Du Pont said the department is pass at midnight Friday.

But Scagram said Friday the willing to accept a consent judglem and said it expects such a consent decree to be filed by Tuesday. Du Pont said it agreed to either dispose of Conoco's interest in the joint venture or to purchase Monsanlo's stake in the venture. The Justice Department action gives Du Pont a major advantage in the three-way bidding war that has broken out for control of Conoco, the ninth-largest U.S. oil

An executive of the First Boston Corp., financial adviser to Du Pont, explained that the approximately 48.2 million shares already submitted to Du Pont, unless withdrawn, plus an additional 15.9 million that Du Pont has the right to chemical group 64.1 million shares, or about 63 percent of Conoco. said Friday the Justice Department has not indicated its position on a Mobil-Conoco merger, but added that he expected significant developments over the weekend.

Mobil on Friday asked the Securities and Exchange Commission to extend the deadline by which Conoco stockholders who have already tendered their shares to Seagrams can change their minds. That deadline was scheduled to ment that will eliminate that prob- SEC will not extend the deadline. The company said it discussed the extention with the SEC staff and was told there were no plans to take that action.

Also on Friday, a Florida court issued a temporary restraining order blocking Seagram from pur-chasing any Conoco shares, and North Carolina authorities said they were proceeding to revoke Seagram's liquor licenses over its planned Conoco acquisition.

Seagram contested the ruling and later said the order obtained by Conoco had been dissolved, offering no details.

The court had enjoined Seagram from completing its tender offer for Conoco and issued an order rebuy from Conoco would give the straining Seagram from its plan to start purchasing Conoco shares Saturday morning.
Conoco, which has actively resisted a Seagram takeover, said the temporary restraining order was issued on the claim that acquisition Conoco shares by Seagram would violate Florida liquor laws. Conoco said that under a "tied

Bank of Canada Increases Discount Rate to 20.54%

By Henry Giniger New York Times Service OTTAWA - The Bank of Canada allowed its discount rate to climb to another record level Thursday in an effort to hait the

The rate at which the central bank lends to private banks was set at 20.54 percent, up from 19.89 percent last week. The rise heralded further increases in the prime rate, which most banks set at 21 percent last week. The Mercantile Bank of Canada, anticipating Thursday's increase in the discount rate, had raised its prime rate to 22 percent, and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce Fricay raised its prime to 21% percent. Other banks were expected to

But the bank's action appeared not to have much effect on the money markets. The discount rate increase was too high in the view of political entities of the government, but not high enough in the view of money traders, who sent the Canadian dollar down in New York to its lowest point in 48

The discount rate is set at a quarter-point shove the average yield at the weekly auction of 91izy Treasury bills, but the bank usually intervenes to influence the vield, and Thursday traders reported that it had intervened "massiveh" to hold the increase down. As a result, the dollar, which had closed conded to keep the dollar from slipping even further, are having a serious effect on the Toronto Stock slide of the Canadian dollar in the Exchange. The movement of money from stocks to relatively riskfree, high-yield investment certifi-cates and Treasury bills created a loss of 3.58 percent in share values Tuesday and Wednesday, and values dropped again sharply Thurs-Thursday at $1.13 United States cents, ciosed Friday at 80.98.

The climbing interest rates, in-ers are forbidden from owning stores that sell liquor. A Conoco Mobil spokesman John Flint subsidiary, Kayo Oil, operates some combination gasoline station-convenience markets that sell beer and liquor.

House Commerce Committee Chairman John Dingell, a Michigan Democrat, said Friday he was deeply concerned by Mobil's bid to take over Conoco.

Rep. Dingell, in a letter to At-torney General William French Smith, also said he was troubled that the Justice Department's exclusive jurisdiction over the proposed acquistion eliminates the role of the Federal Trade Commis-

Bonn to Bolster Steel Industry With Aid Plan

BONN - The West German government plans to provide 1.34 billion Deutsche marks (about $536 million) between 1982 and 1985 to assist the country's troubled steel industry, government spokesman Kurt Becker said on Friday.

The Associated Press

Mr. Becker said that the assistance aims at providing substitute jobs for workers leaving the steel industry, at assisting individual companies in providing severance pay and benefits to such workers. and at providing investment incenrives for measures to modernize and rationalize steel production.

In a separate statement, the Bonn government said that if exports of subsidized steel cause European steel prices to collapse again. West Germany would swiftly exercise its rights under the European Coal and Steel Community treaty to protect its domestic market against the import of such

The government, the statement said, had prepared an official re-quest to the EEC Commission asking authority to impose import duties on subsidized steel and would file its request immediately if the situation warranted.

The government spokesman also announced research grants to the industry of 150 million DM for each of the next four years and said a further 70 million DM would be available over the fouryear period for better redundancy payments for the industry.

Poles Call Bank's Bid BUSINESS NEWS BRIEFS U.S. Business Hails Reagan Tax Plan

By Thomas L. Friedman New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Business leaders have welcomed the passage of President Reagan's tax package with enthusiasm and excitement, describing it as essentially a "revi-talization" of U.S. capitalism.

But their excitement Thursday was tempered slightly by a concern for the program's inflationary potential. Executives and economists noted that the fundamental redirection of the economy implied in the recovery program could easily be undermined if government spending was not controlled.

In discussing the president's tax cut program, most executives cited the importance it placed on encouraging individual initiative. However, they disagreed widely over which of the legislation's farreaching provisions would have the deepest impact on the econo-

"We Are Thrilled"

"We are thrilled." Peter Grace, chairman of W. R. Grace & Co., said in New York. "We've finally turned things around. There is a limit on the amount of money you can take from hard-working people under the guise of compassion. Sure, the tax cut benefits the rich. but it is also going to benefit a lot of people who aren't rich,"

Across the country, in Sunny-vale, Calif., W.J. Sanders 3d, chair-man of Advanced Micro Devices. Inc., a major semiconductor manufacturer, echoed these sentiments. "More capital will now be available for productive enterprises where people have demonstrated skill. The crucial factor for us is the new depreciation schedules that will allow and encourage capital expansion."

Thomas G. Labrecque, president of Chase Manhattan, also saw in the tax cut program a turning point in the U.S. economy from an emphasis on public sector development to the private sector. "I think the most important aspect of the tax package is its three-year term." be said. "If you are talking about a fundamental change it must have permanence, Just as the New Deal needed time in its day, so this needs time now.

While enthusiastic about the tax cut program, Donald B. Marron, chairman of Paine Webber, the stock brokerage and investment banking holding company, echoed a common fear in the business community, that government spending could easily get out of

"In order to build capital in this country you have to give people an incentive to invest," said Mr. Marron. "The tax package will provide a revitalization of that incentive given the budget reductions being for all kinds of investors. But we introduced. must get equal enthusiasm from Congress in coming years for budget cuts as we did with the tax

Inflation was cited by Felix G. Rohatyn, a partner at Lazard Freres & Co., investment bankers. "The president was elected on a particular economic program and he is entitled to have his run at it. it is clearly what be was elected to do." he said. "But I am still skeptical about the inflationary impact in light of the high defense budg-

"I personally am very pleased by the indexation of tax rates beginning in 1985, which eliminates bracket ereep." Mr. Rohatyn added. "It used to be that politicians let inflation raise taxes and nobody had to take the blame for it. Now they are going to bave to own up to any tax increases and I think that is very healthy."

Allan Meltzer, professor of eco-nomics at the Carnegie Mellon University, argued, however, that the enormous stimulus the tax cut provides for the economy will not have a seriously inflationary effect.

Lawrence Chimerine, chairman and chief economist at Chase Econometrics, also predicted that the inflationary aspects of the tax packages could be controlled.

Specific Provisions

While all the business executives noted the importance of the across-the-board tax reductions, there was a diversity in the imporsance each placed on specific pro-

Ira H. Shapiro, national director of tax services for Coopers & Lybrand, accountants, said be believed one of the most important aspects of the tax package would be to stimulate research and development, not only by corporations but by small investors.

Like many industrialists. Donald Trautlein, chairman of the Bethlehem Steel, was most enthusiastic about the increased rates of depreciation included in the president's program that enable large capital-intensive companies to renew their plants quickly. As a sign of faith in the president's policy. Bethlehem on Thurs day announced a $750 million modernization program. Joseph G. Gavin Jr., president of Grumman, also felt that the speeding up of depreciation rates was key to n the tax program. Even the smaller provisions brought out enthusiastic support from executives. "Under the new package not only can I leave more nontaxable money to my heirs," said Martin Bucksbaum, president of the Des Moines-based General Growth Cos., which operates the largest U.S. equity real estate investment trust. "but I can get my estate down in size by passing along more funds right now. Before you could only give $3,000 a year in gifts to any family member, where now it's up to $10,000."

"The old distinction whereby earned income was taxed at a lower rate than unearned income encouraged people to diston their transactions in order to make in-come earned instead of unearned." said a tax attorney. "The abolition of that distinction is going to have a very positive impact on the econ-among the 1,865 issues traded on the New York exchange. The NYSE volume was 43.48 million sbares, compared with 41.56 million traded Thursday. Prices were higher in moderate trading of American Stock Exchange issues. Analysis said investors were encouraged that Irving Trust and a few other banks this week had lowered their charges to brokers because of a drop in the federal funds rate that banks charge each other for overnight loans.

These actions, which followed a steep plunge in last week's money supply report, kept alive speculation the prime rate might come down from its 20!2 percent level. After the markets closed, the Aerospace-Defense Stocks Sliding in U.S.

By Charles J. Elia

AP-Dow Jones
NEW YORK — For most of this ear. U.S. investors were shaken by a highly visible collapse of oil stock prices. Another decline, just as severe, has occurred with little fanfare in one of 1980's other favorite stock groups, serospace-defense issues.

Many of the stocks we monitor have lost 20 percent to 35 percent of their value since the beginning of the year and are near 52-week lows," says Alan Benasuli, aerospace analyst at Drexel Burnham Wolfgang Demisch, of Morgan Stanley & Co., viewing the retreat of issues boistered last year by the pro-military stance of the new ad-ministration, says, "The market is recognizing that the military won't be the panacea fur recession.

Analysts cannot say with certainty that the aerospace stocks have bottomed out. But they are starting to advise clients to begin looking anew at the group.

Mr. Benasuli, for example, called for cautious reassessment of he stocks in January while continuing 10 recommend a few choices. Recently, he advised clients to "take advantage of current weak-ness to start re-establishing posilions" in some of the stocks.

"It can no longer be a blanket ecommendation." he says.

"You're going to have to pick and choose. We believe stock selection will be critical in this phase of the cycle. And, because of the industry's problems, we wouldn't count on a major rise in aerospace price-earnings ratios, so you need to see dependable earnings growth."

Mr. Benasuli's favorite stocks include Raytheon, Northrop and Lockheed, assuming Lockheed terminates its L-1011 program. "We believe Martin Marietta and Unit-ed Technologies are quite cheap at current levels and have appeal in trading-oriented accounts," he adds.

"Fairchild Industries reported lower-than-expected operating earnings in the second quarter and we've lowered our estimates for 1981 and 1982. We continue to view the shares as attractive longerm," Mr. Benasuli says.

Mr. Demisch of Morgan Stanley believes some of the recent weakness in aerospace issues reflects the market's judgment that near-term earnings growth, though good, will be relatively slower than that of some of the U.S. economy's more depressed cyclical industries

depressed cyclical industries.

But he also has his favorites.

They include Martin Marietta.

TRW Inc., United Technologies and Raytheon. The companies we like are those with broad participation, typically having 30 percent to 50 percent of their business tied to the military," he says.

several reasons account for the dis-favor into which aerospace stocks have fallen, including the relegation of rearmament talk to the background as the Reagan administration focused on tax and budger barties.

"Not only have defense issues seemingly been neglected by the administration," he says, "but many uncertainties also have arisen regarding major weapons sys-tems." He cites the lack of deci-sions on the basing of a new gener-ation of missiles and on the building of a new bomber.

"We think some of the uncertainty that hangs over the outlook for major weapons systems will be dissipated as the administration turns its attention back to defense and makes the necessary procure-ment decisions," he says. "In our opinion, this will occur shortly."

Also serving to dampen investor hopes this year, he says, was the recognition that military appropristion requests, though greatly en-larged, will only filter down to the industry in the 1983-84 peri-

U.S to Press Suit Against AT&T if Bill Fails to Pass

New York Times Service
WASHINGTON — The Justice Department, amid intense speculation Thursday on its future course. announced that it would continue to press its antitrust sint against American Telephone & Telegraph — unless a bill is passed that addresses its monopoly concerns about the company's operations.

On Wednesday, when the Justice Department tried but failed to persuade a federal court in Washington to suspend the trial until legislation worked its way through Congress, there was conjecture that the department might simply drop the suit. The trial is scheduled to resume Monday. "We will proceed with the case and, at the same time, try to get Congress to adopt amendments, said Mark Sheehan, a spokesman for the Justice Department. "If an acceptable bill is passed, we won't continue the case, but if not we will continue to press the case."

is different from what occurred in the upswing of the late 1960s. "At that time, the major industry segments — military, civilian space programs and commercial aircraft — were experiencing coincident upturns," he says, while the economy also was advancing. Currently, however, commercia airpiane production is in a severe decline, the space program is only moderately active, and recession is an increasing probability, offset-ting some of the expected growth in military programs. In the case of Boeing, for example, Mr. Benasuli expects an earn-ings decline through 1982, so "irg may be too early to buy Boeing.

FEROCIOUS ALPHABETS By Denis Donoghue. 211 pp. $14.95. Little, Brown and Co., 34 Beacon St., Boston, Mass. 02106. Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

IT all begins with six five-minute talks that the Irish critic Denis Donoghue gave on the BBC — talks oo "the English language and the way we use it," which he transcribes as the opening chapter of his challenging oew book. "Ferocious Alphabets." These talks cover such subjects as odd words that have lost currency, the use of "ooe" as an indefinite pronoun and the question of whether people's styles reveal all we oeed to know about their But the subjects of these talks are only incidentally the point of tran-scribing them. What Donoghue is mainly concerned with here is the discomfort he felt while writing them, a discomfort he blames on the problems of one-way speech: "It was hard to put up with the fact that I was talking to people who could oot answer."

This reminds him of his belief that whether ooe is talking or writing, "the best form of verbal communication is cooversation." "I want to replace a theory of communication by a theory of communion, and to argue that what writers want is the system of exchange which I have described as conversation"— a point he develops in his third chapter, "Communication, Communion, Cooversation."

This in turn reminds him that "if communion is the true came of a writer's desire, we may expect him to make up for the lack of it." "In the present coolext the form of compenpresent cootest the form of compensation may be called style," a theory he develops in his fourth chapter. "Style as Compensation," by defuly prohing the writing styles of John Crowe Ransom, R.P. Blackmur, I.A. Richards, William Empson, T.S. Eliot and William H. Gass.
But once again, what is revealed by

But once again, what is revealed by these dissections is oot really the point of his having undertaken them. The object, I gather, is to demonstrate ing this, Donoghue provides a back-drop for the ultimate purpose of his book.

This is to examine the conflicting claims of two schools of thought that dominate the critical landscape. On one side, there are those critics Dooghue calls "epireaders" — from the Greek epas, meaning speech or ulterance — who believe that writing can be considered a transcript of human speech. Opposing the epireaders are those whom Donoghue calls "graphireaders" — from the Greek graphos, or writing — who believe that words on the page are things in themselves and cannot be treated as "speech" or the reflection of a human

Why has Donoghue, who hords the Henry James chair of letters at New York University, taken this rather inside-out, upside-down approach to his subject, saving a summary of what he is up to until the very end of "Fero-cious Alphabets"? Because, I assume, of his belief in conversation and his desire to bring out his points through give and take with the various writers and critics he discusses. (These include, iocidentally, among the "epireaders," Gerard Manley Hopkins, Georges Poulet, Kenneth Burke,

Paul Ricoeur, Richard Poirier and Harold Bloom, and, among the "gra-phireaders," Stéphane Mallarmé and such modern French writers as Jacques Derrida, Roland Barthes, Paul De Man and Lucette Finas.) In addition, he delays coming to the point because he wants to develop the argument before he reveals the strength of his feelings toward the subject, and thus give his opponents the best possible chance to develop their side.

But why does it matter so much this question of whether, when you read words on a page, you hear a human voice or merely see writing? Why has Denis Donoghue devoted an entire book to the subject? For one thing, where you stand on the ques-tion makes a considerable difference to the interpretation of texts, as Doooghue demonstrates several times in this study. And for another thing, the question has deep political implica-tions. For many "graphireading" avant-gardists hold that language avant-gardists hold that language conceived as a voice is a bourgeois instrument for the suppression of freedom, and that any attempt to sense a speaker behind the words on the page is, as the French critic Jacques Derrida has claimed, an example of the white man assuming that his mode of the white man assuming that his mode of thought is universal.

Whatever the case, Denis Doooghue finally takes a strong stand on the issue. "I detest the current ideology which refers, gloatingly, to the death of the author, the obsolescence death of the author, the dosorescence of the self, the end of man, and so forth," he concludes this difficult but rewarding study. "But I have no gift to set the philosophers right I am oot a philosopher. It makes no difference to me whether the self is to be established." ished by direct argument with the point of telling people that the self is obsolete when it is clear that, say, the Ayatollah Khomeini's self is not? If we create such a vacuum, someone who cares little for aesthetic theory will fill it and disprove our hypothe-

Marathon Negotiations Resolve 50-Day Baseball Strike

Play Will Resume Aug. 10

NEW YORK — The major league baseball strike, which deprived the nation of its summer game for almost two months and became the longest walkout in professional sports history, ended early Friday after marathon negotiat-

Two-man bargaining teams — union chief Marvin Miller and ounsel Donald Fehr for the playas, chief negotiator Ray Grebey and American League president Lee MacPhail for the owners came up with a compromise agree-ment between midnight and 2 a.m., approximately I2 hours after they first sat down at the table Thursday afternoon.

"It's a good deal," said federal mediator Kenneth Moffett, "It's iust terrific."

All-Star Game

The championship season will resume under the original schedule on Monday, Aug. 10, and the owners have the option of making it a split season, with intradivisional playoffs prior to the league cham-

They must notify the players association of such a decision by Sunday evening, Aug. 9 — when the All-Star Game, originally scheduled for July 14, will be played in Cleveland. Workouts will begin this weekend, although some clubs planned informal workouts as early as Friday.

The proposed agreement still must be ratified by the players and owners, but that is not expected to be a problem.

The executive board of the players association — which includes the player representatives of each club — scheduled a meeting for noon Saturday in Chicago to decide whether to pass the tentative ment along to a vote by all 650 major league players.

After seven weeks, the warring parties ended their lengthy and bitter dispute the way most labor strikes are settled — by compro-

The key issue of professional or amateur compensation to a team losing a player in the annual free agent re-entry draft was negotiated as part of what Grebey called "a very definite trade-off."

The players achieved their proposal for a pool of professional talent as compensation but had to give in and submit to a form of punishment" in which a team signing a ranking free agent can protect two fewer players than a learn that doesn't sign anyone. The owners had wanted direct compensution from a team signing a free agent to the player's previous

Ron Guidry of the New York Added Baltimore's Yankees Ken Griffey and Dave Collins of the Cincinnati Reds and Bill Madlock, Phil Garner and John Candelaria of the Pittsburgh Pirates can still become free agents at the end of the 1981 season.

The players also agreed to drop a charge of failing to bargain in good faith - a charge they had filed against the owners with the National Labor Relations Board. In return, the Basic Agreement between the union and management, scheduled to expire Dec. 31, 1983, will be extended one year. In addition, the players' minimum salary will rise from $35,000 to $40,000 in the last year of the present con-

Neither Miller, executive direc-tor of the Major League Players Association, nor Grebey, director of the owners' player relations committee, clamed a victory.

"It's a victory for uobody and a loss for nobody," Grebey said. "It's a good collective-bargaining agreement. There's something in it for both sides. The fans of America are the winners in this. ... Said Miller: "I don't think you can total this thing up the way you total a box score — who wins and who loses. But I think it was a victory for the spirit of the players. I believe it will stand them in good stead in the future for working conditions, for bargaining procedures and in their personal lives."

Nevertheless, Rusty Staub of the New York Mets, who attended almost every negotiating session, emphasized that the settlement would not please the players 100

"A lot of people won't like it," he said, "but I think it will be ratified. Something has been taken away, but it had to be negotiated." The full terms of the settlement were to be made public soon, Gre-

The players association issued veiled warnings concerning future negotiations and it was obvious that bitterness remains.

They were negotiations of intimidation and misjudgment by certain people on the player rela-tions committee," Stanb said. "We stood up for our identity and not having these types of ultimatums put on us [referring to the owners' invoking a unilateral compensation plan that caused the walkout and never having these kind of tac-

"We had no choice. The strike was forced on us. It was obvious they had a schedule. They were determined to test the organization to the fullest limits. I hope they never try to do it again because their success ratio will be the same.

Added Baltimore's Doug De-Cinces, the American League player representative, "I seriously doubt the owners will ever try to challenge the association again.

Meeting in Midtown

The two-man negotiating teams met in the midtown office of National League president Chub Feeney, about four blocks from the headquarters of federal mediator Kenneth Moffett. It marked the first joint talks since negotiations had collapsed in Washington a Moffett said he had no indication when he called for a resumption of the talks that a settlement was in the offing. "Nobody wanted to meet except me," he said. And when the appointed hour arrived at 2 p.m. Thursday, neither Miller nor Grebey had shown up at the hotel. Within the next hour, how-eyer, both sides informed Moffett of the private face-to-face talks in Feeney's office.

Moffett said that he was in contact with the sides about "every two hours." Asked if he kept the negotiators on track, Moffett said, They did it themselves. Just like

Both Miller and Grebey had spent Wednesday meeting their constituencies and indications were that both men needed to "cut deal" - Miller because of increasing player unrest and Grebey because of the willingness of sever-al owners to submit the entire matter to arbitration.

The strike, the first in majorleague history to occur after open-ing day, went 50 days and forced the cancellation of 580 games.

The strike came as a surprise, even though the players warned it could happen unless the owners changed their stance on free-agent compensation. Perhaps the fact that an an 11th-bour agreement --which tabled the key issue of freeagent compensation — averted a strike in May 1980 led to the expectation that somehow the issue could be settled.

Instead, Miller left a negotiating ession in the early hours of June 12, signaling the start of the walk-

On April I, 1980, unable to reach a new basic agreement with the owners, the players association voted to boycott the last week of spring training and set a May 23 strike deadline. Just before that deadline, negotiators averted the walkout by reaching a four-year basic agreement that put off the compensation issue and created a joint committee to study the matter and make recommendations.

Last February, the committee announced it was unable to break the deadlock and the owners promptly implemented their own proposal calling for a team that loses a "ranking free agent" to be compensated by a major-league player in addition to an amateur draft choice. The executive board of the players association voted unanimously to strike on May 29, but representatives for owners and players later agreed to delay the deadline until an NLRB petition for an injunction could be heard. On June 10, Federal Judge Hen-ry Werker denied the NLRB request for an injunction, and Miller immediately sent a memorandum to his membership calling for a walkout before games of June 12. The memo was approved unanimously; after meetings broke off on the 12th, the strike was on. Costs

Main Reaction Relief As 'Sanity Returns'

From Agency Dispatches
NEW YORK — "Delighted" is the word I would use," said Seattle Mariner President Dan O'Brien said, and his words echoed throughout the country. The baseball strike was ending and all was right with the world.

"I love it, obviously," said Eddie Einhorn, co-owner of the Chicago White Sox. "Sanity has returned to baseball." In Friday's early-morning hours, even before the tentative accord was officially amounced, the negotiators began to notify owners and players around the country. Sleepy-eyed baseball executives and players began to react with happy relief to the news that that the seven-week-old strike had been

Padre President Ballard Smith said be hoped each side had learned its lesson. "I don't think anyone's fared too well during this strike," he said, "owners, players or the fans. I just hope we never have to go through something like

There are still a details to be worked out, including how the season will comtinue. Larry Bowa of the Philadelphia Phillies says there should be a first half and second half of the season.

"It would be great for fan interest, especially for teams like the Cubs to have a chance to get back in it," said Bowa of the split-seasons idea. The owners will decide prior to the All-Star game on how they plan to play out the season.

Pittsburgh Pirate outfielder Bill Robinson, who has been on the disabled list since April, was exuberant. "I'm not a drinking man but I am thinking about having a glass of wine to celebrate," he said from his home in New Jersey. "I feel the fans will return. This is the national pastime when people let off a little tension, listening to the games. I praise the good Lord it is settled."

Some of the players who were closest to the negotiations, such as Baltimore's Mark Belanger. weren't overjoyed at the settlement, but were just glad at the prospect of resuming play. "I never was optimistic, even today, but boy am I glad to be back on the field," said Belanger. "I need the remainder of the $175,000 I was supposed to earn."

Players had varying opinions about how long it would take to regain form. "I've been throwing and running every day," Bowa said, "so it shouldn't take me too long to get ready. The pitchers probably will have the biggest problem. Throwing in a workout is not the same as pitching in a Pitcher Wayne Garland, the Cleveland Indian player representative, said he didn't think he could be ready by the proposed Aug. 10 date of resumption. "No, I don't think it's enough time," he said.

'A Farce'

He added that he thought trying to play an All Star Game on Aug. 9, as reported, was "a farce. I don't think the players could play up to the expectations of the fans around the country." "I doubt there'll be any problems with the players," said Atlanta player rep Phil Niekro. "Marvin Miller accorded it I think both a accepted it. I think both parties realized it's the best they're going to get - otherwise there's not gonna be any more baseball this year."

The negotiations took a heavy toll on Miller, the executive director of the players association. This is my last-ever negotiation," he said.
"I am retiring."

Journey With Jefferson

The Associated Press

THARLOTTESVILLE, Va. — Dumas Malone, perhaps the best friend Thomas Jefferson has ever had, has won his race with time.

Dumas Malone is in his 90th year, and blind.

Last Christmastime he wrote with a felt-upped pen in his still-firm script the final words of the sixth and concluding volume of his masterwork, "Jefferson and

His Time." It took 40 years.
"I guess I know him better than anyone," Malone reflected in his book-lined office in the top floor of the Alderman Library at the University of Virginia. It is only right that Malone should bave finished his work at this school, which Jefferson the scholar created and Jefferson the architect designed.

"Part of his appeal is that Jefferson was a universal man," Malone said. "That lasts. His politics don't. But his architecture, his writing are timeless."

'My Long Journey'

The universality drew Malone to the nation's third president. He conceded that Benjamin Franklin, "the most entertaining American," might have been better company. But be liked Jefferson at the start and, after what he calls "my long journey with Mr. Jefferson," still liked him at the end. "If you're going to spend years with someone, you've got to like him."

There is also a personal affinity, according to Steve Hochman, 35, Malone's assistant researcher since 1968. "They both have the Southern manner, the civility. They both look on the bright side. They look to the future."

Hochman is working on his next project - as research assistant for former President Jimmy Carter's memoirs. His work with Malone is finished: The last volume of "Jefferson and His Time" was published in July.

Malone's vision began failing as he started the final volume, "The Sage of Monticello," in 1976, He had bad cataracts, His eyesight fell a further victim to old age. Still he pressed on. "Steve would read things I needed. Minutes of the trustees of the university. Copies of The Richmond Enquirer for legislative news. Then he would record them on tape and index the important parts. That way I became more familiar with the material than if I'd read it. I could play the tape back four or five times. I might not have read it that of-

Malone was also aided by a video screen that magnified his script 40 times. Half a word fills up the screen. "It never crossed my mind to step. If I'd gone completely blind. I probably would have dictated, but I don't dictate very well.

"In the last three volumes I was getting pretry old, and you never know how long you're going to live. So I made a point of cleaning up each chapter as I went along, leaving it in publishable form.

'Solicitous Wife'

One by one the pages on his legal-sized pads filled up, marking another step in Malone's journey with Jefferson. "My wife couldn't understand why it took so long. But she got reconciled to

In his acknowledgment at the end of Volume 5, Malone wrote: "My solicitous wife has kept me going despite the ravages of time. trust she is not weary in welldoing nor tired of being Malone had begun Volume I in 1943 after resigning as director of the Harvard University Press. Before that he had been editor of the Dictionary of American Biography, for which he wrote the 15,000-word entry on Jefferson.

"One of my regrets is having spent as much time as I did in a managerial capacity. With a book, even if it's no good, it's yours, like a child." During his boyhood in Georgia, if anyone was a local bero it was Robert E. Lee, "although there was always someone around named Jeff." After a doctorate at Yale, Malone won a fellowship to go abroad and study Jefferson's career as minister to France. He thought of a biogra-pby then, but teaching and edit-ing intervened. Then in 1943 came the bicentennial of Jefferson's birth.

"Somebody said he couldn't imagine anyone foolish enough to write a biography of Jefferson. What the poor devil would do would be to enter a labyrinth of architecture, science, politics and never come out."

Jefferson left a lot to posterity. He wrote down everything, in-cluding the temperature in Phila-delphia the afternoon the Continental Congress voted to accept his Declaration of Independence - 76 degrees. The details are a biographer's dream. And night-

50 Volumes of Papers

Princeton has been working on an edition of Jefferson's papers almost as long as Malone has been writing the biography. The work, still not completed, will run 50 volumes.

"A biographer lives with his subject more than his family did," Malone said. "I get to read all his mail. But I don't want people to think Jefferson is all I did. This is a work of my old age. I wrote the first volume when I

Dumas Malone

[Volume 5 won a Pulitzer Prize, making Malone, then 83, the old-est winner.] I can understand him as an old man, being old myself. could sympathize with him more than I would have as a young man."

Eclipses, Minuets

James Parton once said that Jefferson "could calculate an eclipse, survey an estate, tie an artery, plan an edifice, try a case, break a horse dance a minuet and play a violin."

Malone does not dance minuets, but in his journey hehad to learn about botany, archi-tecture and what not to keep pace with his mentor, who believed that education would save the world and if it didn't, certainly ignorance would not.
Only once in his trek did Dumas Malone have a deadline other than the one of his own mortality. Little, Brown, his publisher, wanted the final volume ready for July 4, the day the Dec-laration of Independence was accepted and the day Jefferson Dumas Malone made it out of the labyrinth by that deadline. "It's something he had wanted to do since the 1920s," said Hochman. "He was determined to finwas past 50, three after I was 70. ish. He's that kind of person."

PEOPLE: Billy Graham Deplores Faluell's Politicking

The Rev. Billy Graham says that church involvement in partisan politics like that practiced by the Rev. Jerry Falwell and his Moral Majority "dilutes the gospel." "I support many of the moral things he's talking about." Graham said. adding that he had met Falwell once. But he said he "parts company" with Falwell on the Moral Majority's effort to involve the church in politics. "I think the church has to take stands on moral and social issues, but I do not think we should be involved in partisan politics." he said at a news conference in Kansas City, where he is participating in the American Festival of Evangelism. "I have been identi-fied in the past with certain people who have been running for politi-cal office." Graham said. "I do not intend to let that happen again." * * *

The Golden Charybdis prize at the Taormina International Film festival was awarded to Canada's Raigh Thomas for his film "Ticket to Heaven," the story of a youth who drifts from Toronto to a mystic community in California. The 10-day festival gave the second prize to Iceland's "Land og Synir" (The Earth and Its Sons) by Agust Gudmunsson, while Poland's Jamisz Kikowski won a bronze statuette for his "Index." Vernon Zimmerman of the United States won a special mention for his "Fade to Black," the story of a frustrated Hollywood messenger boy who turns to homicide. The all-woman jury of the yearly festi-val included Italian actress Sandra Milo, French author. Margnerite Duras, and South African singer Miriam Makeba.

Bob Keeshan has returned home to Babylon, N.Y, after being re-leased from a hospital in Toronto where he was treated for a heart attack. Keeshan, 54, who has portrayed Captain Kangaroo on the children's television show for the last 26 years, received countless get-well messages during his 19-day hospital stay. He collapsed at Toronto International Airport as he arrived there to accept an award for his work with children from the Parents Without Partners organi-

The engineer often credited with being "the father of television" celebrated his 92d birthday and said that although he never dreamed TV would ever become so good from a technological standpoint, he seldom watches it because what appears on TV is "awful" Viac mir K. Zworykin, who came to the United States from Russia after the revolution and patented his first TV tube in 1923 when he was working for Westinghouse in Pittsburgh, lives in retirement in Princeton, N.J. He said in an interview that he never expected TV to become such a pervasive force worldwide. The lechnique is wonderful. I didn't ever dream it would be so good. The color and everything. It is beyond my expectation." Zworykin, who invented the image orthicon tube, which became the standard TV tube, said he was not pleased with television content. The programs! I would never let my children even come close to this thing. It's awful what they're doing."

Beer baron Pant Kalmanovitz has offered by pay $15 million for a bayside statue honoring justice, but San Francisco Mayor Diame Feinstein thinks a many part of the barbara in Feinstein thinks a more appropri ate tribute would be a new courthouse for the city. Mrs. Feinstein tried unsuccessfully to talk Kal-manovitz out of his plan to errect a large statue fashioned after the le gal symbol of a blindfolded maiden holding aloft the scales of jus-tice. The structure would be about the same size as the Statue of Lib-erry and be called "Statue of Jus-tice." Feinstein had previously written Kalmanovitz and his law-yer asking that instead of a statue, she would like to see a Hall of Justice where all the city's courts could be consolidated in one build ing. The mayor said the city's pressing municipal budget prevents construction of a new city hall with public funds. The lawyer said his client would not be receptive to building a new city half "The statue is the only idea we're interested in and that's it," he said.

Col. Charles Beckwith, who led the ill-fated mission to rescue the hostages in Iran, says he plans to retire from the military this fall and teach anti-terrorist tactics to corporations. He said five associates with whom be's worked in anti-terrorist activities in the past will join him. In April, 1980, Beckwith led a team into Iran in an effort to rescue 53 Americans held hostage. But the raid was canceled after three helicopters developed mechanical trouble. As the team withdrew, a helicopter collided with a C-130 aircraft and both burst into flames. Eight crewmer were killed.
